NOVA SCOTIA, in its moſt extenſive meaning, a province of Britiſh America, bounded on the north-weſt by Canada, on the north-eaſt by the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on the ſouth-eaſt by the Atlantic, and on the ſouth by the Atlantic Ocean and the United States of America; about 400 miles from eaſt to weſt, but of very different breadths: in ſome places 150, in others not more than 40 from north to ſouth. It was in the year 1784 divided into two provinces, viz. New Brunſwick and Nova Scotia Proper. Nova Scotia, in this limited ſenſe, is a peninſula, joined to the continent by a narrow iſthmus, at the north-eaſt extremity of the bay of Fundy, and is about 240 miles in length from ſouth-weſt to north-eaſt, and from 30 to 60 in breadth, and lies to the weſt of New Brunſwick. Though ſituated between the 44th and 50th degrees of north latitude, and in a favourable part of the temperate zone, yet is the winter here of an almoſt inſupportable length and ſeverity, continuing at leaſt ſeven months in the year; to this immediately ſucceeds, without the intervention of any thing that may be called ſpring, a ſummer, when the heat is as violent as the cold was in the winter months; the heat indeed is of no long continuance, the country being wrapt in the gloom of a perpetual fog, long after the ſummer ſeaſon has commenced. The ſoil in moſt parts is thin and barren, the corn it produces of a ſhrivelled kind, like rye, and the graſs intermixed with a cold ſpongy moſs. It is not, indeed, uniformly bad, there being tracts in Nova Scotia, not inferior to the beſt land in New England. But however unpromiſing this country may be, ſome of the firſt Europeans, neglecting all the delightful tracts to the ſouthward, here formed their ſettlements. The French ſeated themſelves here before they made any eſtabliſhment in Canada, and increaſed largely with very little aſſiſtance from Europe. The firſt grant of lands was made to ſir William Alexander, by James I. from whom it received the name of Nova Scotia; by the French it was called Acadia. Since its firſt ſettlement, it has more than once changed rulers and proprietors, nor was it confirmed to England, till the peace of Utrecht, in the year 1713. In the year 1749, 3000 families were conveyed thither, at the charge of the Engliſh government, and the town of Halifax, the preſent capital, was then founded. Since that time ſeveral towns have been founded, eſpecially during the American war, many royaliſts retiring thither, and the towns then were flouriſhing, ſince the peace they are ſaid to be rather on the decline. The country round Halifax has the appearance of cultivation and a flouriſhing ſtate, but the ſuperior advantages to be obtained in the American ſtates will moſt probably cauſe moſt of the ſettlers to emigrate.

NOVA ZEMBLA, an iſland in the Frozen Ocean, ſeparated from the continent of Ruſſia, by the ſtraits of Vaigatſkoi, about 500 miles in length, and from 100 to 200 in breadth. It is more properly two iſlands, as a ſtrait or channel of the North Sea nearly in the centre, divides it into two parts, North and South. This country was firſt diſcovered by the Engliſh, in the year 1553. It has ſince been viſited by ſhips attempting to diſcover a north-eaſt paſſage, and in the year 1596, a Dutch veſſel being wrecked on the coaſt, the ſeamen paſſed the winter in this unhappy country, but were with great difficulty preſerved alive. Since that, ſome Ruſſians have paſſed a winter there without ſuffering ſo much. The country is repreſented as deſolate in the extreme, producing no trees, nor any vegetable but moſs and ſome few arctic plants. Some human beings have been ſeen there at times, but they are not ſuppoſed to be inhabitants, but Samoeids who have ventured acroſs, either in canoes, or on the ice, for fiſh or game. The animals ſeen there are white bears, white foxes, elks, reindeer, and rabbits; ſea-cows abound on the coaſts, and ſea-fowl, to lay their eggs. Long. 68, to 95. 20. E. NOVGOROD, a city of Ruſſia, and capital of a government, on the river Volchova, at the north end of the lake Ilmen. The ſee of an archbiſhop. It is one of the moſt ancient towns in Ruſſia, and was formerly called Novgorod Veliki, or Grand Novgorod. In the ninth century, it was taken by Ruric, great duke of Ruſſia, who made it the capital of his dominions. At his death, the ſeat of government was removed to Kiev, and Novgorod continued for above a century under the juriſdiction of governors nominated by the great duke. Afterwards, Novgorod was for a long time governed by its own dukes; theſe ſovereigns were at firſt ſubordinate to the great dukes, who reſided at Kiev and Vladimir, but afterwards, as the town increaſed in population and wealth, they gradually uſurped an abſolute independency. As the dukes were elected by the inhabitants, they gradually bartered away, as the price of their nomination, all their moſt valuable prerogatives; and, in effect, Novgorod was a republic under the juriſdiction of a nominal ſovereign. The privileges enjoyed by the inhabitants, however unfavourable to the power of the dukes, proved extremely beneficial to the real intereſts of the town; it became the great mart of trade between Ruſſia and the Hanſeatic cities, and made the moſt rapid advances in opulence and population. At this period its dominions were ſo extenſive, its power ſo great, and its ſituation ſo impregnable, as to give riſe to a proverb, "Who can reſiſt the Gods and Great Novgorod?" It continued in this flouriſhing ſtate until the middle of the 15th century, when the great dukes of Ruſſia laid claim to its feudal ſovereignty; a demand which the inhabitants ſometimes evaded by compoſition, ſometimes by reſiſtance, but were ſometimes compelled to acknowledge. At length, in 1471, Ivan Vaſſilievitch I. ventured to aſſert his right to the ſovereignty of Novgorod, and enforced his pretenſions by a formidable army; he vanquiſhed the troops of the republic, oppoſed to him in the field; and having forced the citizens to acknowledge his claims, appointed a governor, who was permitted to reſide in the town, and exerciſe the authority formerly veſted in their own dukes. Ivan, however, by no means contented with this limited ſpecies of government, watched a favourable opportunity of extending his authority; and as a pretence is never wanting to a powerful aggreſſor, he, in 1477, laid ſiege to the town. His deſigns being abetted by the internal feuds and diſſenſions which had long prevailed in this independent republic, the inhabitants were conſtrained to ſubſcribe to all the conditions impoſed by the haughty conqueror. The gates were thrown open; the great duke entered the place in the character of a ſovereign: and the whole body of people, tendering the oath of allegiance, delivered into his hands the charter of their liberties, which unanimity would ſtill have preſerved inviolate. An idea of its populouſneſs, when compared with its preſent declined ſtate, is manifeſt from the fact, that, in 1508, above 15,000 perſons died of an epidemical diſorder; more than double the number of its preſent inhabitants. In its moſt flouriſhing condition, it contained at leaſt 400,000 ſouls. Under the reign of Ivan Vaſſilievitch II. the proſperity of Novgorod experienced a moſt fatal downfall from which it never recovered; that monarch having, in 1570, diſcovered a ſecret correſpondence between ſome of the principal inhabitants and Sigiſmund Auguſtus, king of Poland, relative to a ſurrender of that city into his hands, inflicted the moſt exemplary and inhuman vengeance upon them. He repaired in perſon to Novgorod; and appointed a court of enquiry, juſtly denominated the tribunal of blood. Contemporary hiſtorians relate, that its proceedings continued during the ſpace of five weeks; and that on each day of this fatal period, more than 500 inhabitants fell victims to the vengeance of incenſed deſpotiſm. According to ſome authors, 25,000, according to others, more than 30,000 perſons periſhed in this dreadful carnage. The preſent town is ſurrounded by a rampart of earth, with a range of old towers at regular diſtances, forming a circumference of ſcarcely a mile and a half; and even this inconſiderable circle includes much open ſpace, and many houſes which are not inhabited. The cathedral of St. Sophia is probably one of the moſt ancient churches in Ruſſia: it was begun in 1044, by Vladimir Yaroſlavitch, duke of Novgorod, and completed in 1051. Several princes of the ducal family of Ruſſia are interred in this cathedral: 92 miles SSE. Peterſburg, and 260 NW. Moſkow. Long. 48. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 58. 35. N.

NOVGOROD (Niznei), a town of Ruſſia, and capital of a government, ſituated at the conflux of the Oka and Volga. It was built in the year 1222, by the great duke Jurii, or George Wſewoloditſh, and as it was the appenage and place of reſidence of the petty Ruſſian princes, many of them lie buried here. In this city are two cathedrals, 28 pariſh churches, and moſt of them are built with ſtone, and five convents. It is an archbiſhop's ſee, and has a caſtle, ſurrounded with ſtone walls. The trade of this place is ſo conſiderable, that the ſhops make a very handſome appearance, being richly furniſhed with all kinds of foreign and home goods. In the great fire that broke out here in 1715, ſome thouſands of the inhabitants loſt their lives: 492 miles ESE. Peterſburg, and 220 E. Moſcow. Long. 61. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 56. 18. N.

NUBIA, a country of Africa, bounded on the north by Egypt, on the eaſt by the Red Sea, on the ſouth by Abyſſinia, and on the weſt by countries of Africa, of which hardly the names are known. Nubia is compoſed of ſeveral kingdoms, among which, Sennaar and Dungala appear to be the moſt powerful, at leaſt, they are beſt known; great part of the coaſt is under the power of the Turks, as well as the country between Egypt and Dungala. Great part of the country is compoſed of ſandy deſerts, but, on the other hand, many diſtricts, particularly near the rivers, are uncommonly fertile. Merchants trade here for the purchaſe of ſandal-wood, gold, civet, and ivory. The inhabitants are ſaid to be acquainted with a poiſon of ſo ſubtle a nature, that a grain is ſufficient to deſtroy ten perſons. Millet grows in great abundance; the ſugar-cane is cultivated, but for want of knowing well how to prepare it, the ſugar is black.

NULES, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia: 25 miles NNE. Valencia.

NUMAGA, a river of Germany, in Auſtrian Swabia, which runs into the Rhine, 6 miles above Briſach.

NUN, or Vled de Nun, a province of Africa, to the ſouth of Sus, from which it is ſeparated by ſandy deſerts. The emperor of Morocco arrogates to himſelf the ſovereignty of this country, but his real authority is here extremely feeble. This vaſt, but deſert province, affords not a ſingle harbour, or anchoring place along a coaſt of 60 leagues, that is, quite to Cape Bojador. It is inhabited by different tribes of Arabs, whoſe camps are ſcattered over ſuch parts of the interior country as are capable of cultivation. The ſide next the ſea is a ſandy ſhore, lined with rocks under water, over which the waves break violently. Ships are often driven on this coaſt, by rapid currents, formed between the continent and the Canary Iſlands; and Spaniſh, Engliſh, and French veſſels are frequently ſhipwrecked. When ſuch a misfortune happens, the fate of the unhappy mariners is moſt deplorable; they are immediately ſeized and ſtripped by the Arabs, who, notwithſtanding the laws obſerved among themſelves in their robberies, take from each other their ſlaves and booty, by open force. Their wretched priſoners are expoſed to hunger, thirſt, the caprices of their maſters, and every humiliation of miſery. To the ſhame of humanity, they are bought and ſold, and frequently exchanged for camels, or other beaſts, in the markets of the deſerts. The emperor of Morocco uſes all his influence to procure theſe unfortunate ſufferers to be delivered up to him; but the ſlowneſs of the negociations, and the obſtacles met with at every ſtep, render their iſſue very uncertain; and ſhould they even be ſurrendered to this prince, his juſtice and generoſity muſt again be long and patiently ſolicited, before they are finally ſet at liberty. The ſeamen of a ſhip from Nantz, in the Guinea trade, which was ſhipwrecked on this coaſt, about the end of the year 1775, were two years before they returned to France. The province of Vled de Nun has a conſiderable trade. After having paſſed the deſerts, that ſeparate it from Morocco, we find many tracts of land capable of cultivation, and which produce gums and excellent wax. As theſe people are ſo far removed from the reach of tyranny, as to live in a kind of independence, luxuries are more indulged among them; and they make uſe of many European commodities, eſpecially linen. Several of theſe Arab tribes are more affable and honeſt, than the other Moors. They trade to Mogador, and it is probable they have a more immediate communication with the factories of Senegal.

NUNDYDROOG, a town and fortreſs of Hindooſtan, in the Myſore country, and capital of a conſiderable diſtrict, built on the ſummit of a mountain, 1700 feet in height, the greater part inacceſſible, beſieged and taken by the Britiſh, in the year 1792. From the 22d of September to the 18th of October, the brave garriſon reſiſted with heroic firmneſs. On that day, the breaches being rendered practicable, lord Cornwallis, with a view to intimidate the garriſon, encamped within four miles of the fort; and it was determined to make the aſſault at midnight, in hopes of taking the garriſon by ſurprize. The vigilance of the enemy, however, ſoon diſcovered the aſſailants, but their fire was not ſufficiently well directed, to prevent the Britiſh ſoldiery from mounting the breach. The carnage which muſt have enſued was prevented, partly by a number of the garriſon eſcaping by ladders over a low part of the wall, but chiefly, by the laudable exertions of captain Robertſon, who commanded the ſtorming party, and who with a humanity which reflects the utmoſt honour on his character, from the moment he entered the fort, directed his whole attention to preſerving order, and preventing the effuſion of blood.

NUREMBERG, an imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Franconia. It is a large and well built town, but not populous, ſituated in ſandy ſpot, is well cultivated and fruitful, and on account of the man pleaſure-ſeats near it, as alſo the beautiful and large villages round i extremely pleaſant. It ſtands on the Pregnitz, which runs through t middle of the town, and over it, excluſive of divers wooden bridges, a laid alſo ſix others of ſtone. This town is environed with double wall which are fortified with ſeveral ſmall and large towers, and theſe again wi cannon, and a broad and deep ditch, in circuit about a ſhort German mil The number of its ſtreets amounts to about 500, and that of its houſes 8000, which latter are alſo, for the moſt part, large and built of ſtone but yet the number of its inhabitants is by no means proportionable the largeneſs of the town. The magiſtrates and almoſt all the inhabitants, are Lutherans, but on account of their having formerly received the interim, ſeveral Roman Catholic cuſtoms are ſtill retained in their divine ſervice. Excluſive of two pariſh churches, Nuremburg contains fifteen others, including chapels. The town of Nuremberg is divided into eight parts or quarters, and 131 captainſhips. In one quarter lies the imperial fortreſs, being an old faſhioned citadel, ſtanding on a mountain, in which the firſt counſellor, as imperial bailiff always has his reſidence, and is ſtyled the caſtellan. Not far from the imperial fortreſs here ſtood the old citadel of the Burggraves of Nuremberg, which was burnt down in 1420, and in 1427 was diſpoſed of by the Burggrave, and elector Frederick to the town. At preſent it contains a granary, a pentagonal tower, and a priſon. The council-houſe is one of the moſt magnificent in all Germany, and in its apartments are to be ſeen ſome excellent paintings. The patriciate here took its riſe in 1198, the emperor Henry VI. aſſiſting here at a tournament, at which time he alſo raiſed thirty-eight burghers' families to the degree of nobility. In its carefulneſs to maintain its nobility, it has greatly the ſuperiority over almoſt all other degrees of nobility in Germany. The council of Nuremberg conſiſts of thirty-four noble, and eight handicraft counſellors. The military force of this town conſiſts of ſeven companies of foot, each of which in time of peace contains 100 men, but in time of war is 185 ſtrong; of two companies of cuiraſſiers, each conſiſting of eighty-five men, and two of invalids, amounting to 226. Out of the burgherſhip twenty-five ſtandards are always kept in arms, each of which conſiſts of between 300 and 400 men, excluſive of 200 gunners, and two companies of the town cavalry. Divers Nurembergers have for a long time paſt acquired conſiderable reputation in the arts of painting and engraving, a great number of its artiſts and handicrafts people execute in ivory, wood, and metal, numberleſs ingenious things at a very low price, which are exported all over the world. Thoſe toys do not bring in ſo much money to the town at preſent, as they did formerly, but this article is even yet conſiderable, Nuremberg being one of the greateſt trading towns in Germany. Geography is much indebted to the celebrated ſhop for land-charts eſtabliſhed here, by John Bapt. Homann. In the imperial matricular, this town is rated to one Roman month, at 980 florins. To each chamber-term it contributes 812 rixdollars. The tract next adjoining round the town is environed with lines. The territory called the circle of Nuremberg, is conſiderable: 102 miles E. Heidelberg, and 78 ESE. Mentz. Long. 28. 52. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 24. N.

NURTINGEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, and duchy of Wurtemberg, on the Neckar. The hoſpital here, founded in 1481, is ſaid to be the richeſt foundation in the whole duchy. In the years 1473, and 1751, this town ſuffered by fire: and in 1634, it ſuffered conſiderably from the imperialiſts: 14 miles SE. Stuttgart, and 60 E. Straſburg. Long. 26. 58. E. NYBORG, or Nyeborg, a ſea-port town of Denmark, ſituated on the eaſt coaſt of the iſland of Funen, in a bay of the great Belt, ſurrounded with a rampart and ditch. The harbour is large, but neither deep enough nor ſheltered from ſome winds. The inhabitants ſubſiſt partly by accommodating the paſſengers, who daily croſs from hence to Corſoer, in Zealand, or return hither from thence; and partly by commerce. The ſhips that paſs through the Great Belt are obliged to pay toll here; for which purpoſe a man of war is always ſtationed in the Belt. All that remains of the ancient royal palace, where Chriſtian II. was born, in 1481, and when an infant carried to the top of it by a monkey, and brought down again without receiving any hurt, is only a large wing with a flat tower, a little higher than the roof. It ſerves, at preſent, for a magazine and arſenal. This city was firſt built in 1175, and in the thirteenth and fourteenth century, moſt of the aſſemblies of the ſtates and courts of judicature, particularly the remarkable diet in 1256, were held here. In 1659, the Swedes were totally defeated almoſt under the guns of its caſtle: 16 miles W. Corſoer. Long. 10. 15. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 22. N.

NYEKIOBING, a town of Denmark, in the iſland of Falſter, on a narrow channel, oppoſite Laland. This is one of the moſt ancient towns of the kingdom. It is ſituated on the ſtraits called Guldborgſund, which divide Falſter from Moen, and is a pretty large well built town. On the land ſide it is fortified with a wall and a ditch; and carries on a conſiderable trade. Here is a free grammar-ſchool of four claſſes, and an hoſpital, which is one of the beſt endowed in the whole kingdom. The royal palace is a great ornament to the town. Queen Sophia reſided in this palace, from 1558 till 1631, as did alſo her grandſon, prince Chriſtian, his conſort Magdalena Sybilla, and the dowager of Chriſtian V. Charlotta Amelia, who died here in 1714. Since that time the caſtle has been neglected, and ſome of the apartments are unfurniſhed and uninhabited. In 1288, Nyekiobing was plundered; and in 1507, a remarkable congreſs was held here, between king John and thoſe Hanſe towns which lie on the Baltic. Long. 11. 51. E. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 50. N.

ODENHEIM, a princely priory of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, founded in the year 1122, near a village of that name. In the year 1507, Philip, biſhop of Spire, permitted the college to be removed from Odenheim to Bruchſal; at the ſame time granting to the prior, dean, and chapter, the church of Our Lady, in that town. This convent, therefore, though removed to Bruchſal, a town in the dioceſe of Spire, is yet commonly called Odenheim from the primary place of its foundation. The prior of Odenheim, who is generally the biſhop of Spire, ſits and votes in that quality at the diet, among the prelates of the empire. His matricular aſſeſſment is ſeven foot-ſoldiers, or, inſtead thereof, 40 florins per month; and to the chamber of Wetzlar, 81 rixdollars 14½ kruitzers. By virtue of an ancient cuſtom, the chapter levies the contributions on the ſubjects, and the prior receives a yearly penſion. The chapter has, indeed, found means to get the whole management of the priory into their own hands, excluding the prior from any part of it; and in the year 1729, he made a complaint, that having advanced out of the treaſury at Spire, the imperial, circular, and Wetzlar aſſeſſments for the priory of Odenheim, he had not been able even to recover his own money; and therefore, as biſhop of Spire, renounced the payment of the ſeveral taxations with which the ſaid priory was charged : 14 miles S. ODENSEE, a town of Denmark, and capital of the iſland of Funen, ſituated on a river which runs into a large bay, about a mile from the town. It is the ſee of a biſhop, and contains three churches, beſides the cathedral. It has upwards of thirty large ſhips, beſides ſmaller ones, belonging to it, and as many foreign veſſels trade here. The king has a palace, but not magnificent. In the year 1621, Chriſtian IV. erected a college, and endowed it liberally for four profeſſors. Odenſee ſupplies the greateſt part of the army, and eſpecially the cavalry, with all their leather accoutrements, and is particularly famous for gloves. Here is a conſiderable cloth manufacture, a ſugar-houſe, and a manufacture for ſoap. The Daniſh language is, by many, thought to be ſpoken here in its greateſt purity. The ſee of Odenſee was erected by king Harold Blaatand, before the year 980. And after it had been aboliſhed, during the perſecution of Sueno, it was reſtored by Knut the Great, in 1020. A ſynod or aſſembly of the clergy was held here in 1205, and a diet in 1527. At another diet held here, in 1538, a ſolid foundation was laid for the reformation of the whole kingdom, and the hierarchy and diſcipline of the Daniſh church ſettled. In 1701, a ſubſidy-treaty was concluded here betwixt the king of Denmark, England, and Holland. In 1724, a trading company was eſtabliſhed at Odenſee, by a very favourable royal charter. The number of inhabitants is about 5200. Long. 10. 23. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 28. N.

ONEGLIA, or Oneille, a ſeaport of Italy, and capital of a principality, on the coaſt of the Mediterranean, which carries on a conſiderable trade in olive-oil. It is well built, and had formerly a large and good citadel, which was deſtroyed in the wars between the duke of Savoy and the Genoeſe. Towards the eaſt is a mountain which advances into the ſea, and forms a promontory called Cape Oneglia. Towards the ſea it is defended by walls and ſome ſmall forts. In the year 1692, it was bombarded by the French. On the 23d of October, 1792, the French admiral arrived in the harbour of Oneglia, and having prepared a proclamation, inviting the inhabitants to an union with the French nation, he ſent it by captain Duchayla, under a flag of truce, to be preſented to the magiſtrates. The admiral followed the boat, which proceeded with the flag of truce, alone, and ordered the other veſſels to keep ſtudiouſly at a diſtance from the ſhore. The people, at firſt, appeared to receive the boat with demonſtrations of friendſhip, but at the moment captain Duchayla was preparing to addreſs them at a ſmall diſtance, they aſſailed it with a ſhower of muſquetry, by which the aid de camp of marſhal Lahouliere, who accompanied captain Duchayla, two midſhipmen, and four ſeamen, were killed, and the captain himſelf, and adjutant-general Lacouverſiene wounded. The magiſtrates affected to excuſe themſelves; but their apology not proving ſatisfactory to the admiral, he prepared to take an ample, and indeed a cruel revenge. As ſoon as the boat was out of danger, he ordered his ſquadron to drop their anchors, and cannonade the town. At the ſame time it was attacked by land, by marſhal Lahouliere, and being taken by ſtorm, was ſurrendered to a general plunder, and afterwards ſet on fire in different places: 30 miles NE. Nice, and 50 SW. Genoa. Long. 25. 36. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 55. N.

ONEGLIA, a principality of Italy, ſurrounded on all ſides, except towards the ſea, by the territories of the Genoeſe. It is divided into three vallies, viz. of Oneglia, Maro, and Prela. The firſt is covered with fruit-trees, intermixed with houſes, ſo as to have the appearance of a continued orchard. The valley of Maro or Mairo extends from the village of St. Lazara to the Col of S. Bernard, where it joins the vally of Pieve, which is in the juriſdiction of the Genoeſe. The third, or vally of Pierrelata or Prela, lies to the weſt of the other two. All theſe vallies extend 15 miles from the ſea: and in them they reckon 53 towns or villages, 3000 families, 14,000 ſouls, and 2000 men fit to bear arms. The firſt owner of the vally of Oneglia, known, was the biſhop of Albenga, who, not able to reſiſt the power of the Genoeſe and other troubleſome neighbours, in the year 1292, ſurrendered it to the family of Doria, from whoſe deſcendants, in the year 1576, it was transferred to the duke of Savoy. This country produces wine, fruits, and excellent olive-oil. Oneglia is the capital.

OONALASHKA, or Unalaſhka, an iſland in the North Pacific Ocean, ſeparated from the continent of North America, by a channel in the direction of north weſt by north. Captain Cook and captain King viſited this iſland in the year 1778 : a few of the inhabitants now and then came off to the ſhips, and bartered a few trifling things with the ſeamen ; but never remained above a quarter of an hour at a time : on the contrary, they rather ſeemed ſhy ; and yet they appeared to be no ſtranger to veſſels in ſome degree like their's. They behaved with a degree of politeneſs uncommon to ſavage tribes. While they lay here, ſeveral of the natives came and bartered a few fiſhing implements for tobacco. One of them, a young man, overſet his canoe, while alongſide of their boats. The youth, by this accident was obliged to come into the ſhip, and he went down into Captain Cook's cabin, upon the firſt invitation, without expreſſing the leaſt reluctance or uneaſineſs. His dreſs was an upper garment, like a ſhirt, made of the large gut of ſome ſea animal, probably the whale ; and an under garment of the ſame ſhape, made of the ſkins of birds, dreſſed with the feathers on, and neatly ſowed together ; the feathered ſide being worn next the ſkin. It was mended or patched with pieces of ſilk-ſtuff ; and his cap was ornamented with two or three ſorts of glaſs beads. His own clothes being wet, they gave him others, in which he dreſſed himſelf very readily From his behaviour, and that of ſome others, theſe people were no ſtranger to Europeans, and to ſome of their cuſtoms. But there was ſomething the ſhips that greatly excited their curioſity ; for ſuch as could not come in canoes, aſſembled on the neighbouring hills, to look at them. The were obſerved to eat raw fiſh. Long. 191. 20. to 192. E. Greenwich. Lat 53. 45. to 54. N.

OPORTO or O Porto, a city and ſea-port of Portugal, in the provinc of Entre Duero e Minho, ſituated on the Duero, about a league from i mouth. It owes its origin to a town called Cale or Gaya, which lay on rugged mountain on the other ſide of the river, being built by part of it inhabitants as a much more convenient ſituation ; and therefore calle Portucale or Porto de Cale. It was afterwards, on account of its wealt and flouriſhing commerce, erected into a biſhop's ſee. The whole kingdo has received its name from hence. It was formerly ſubject to particula lords, but at preſent belongs to the crown, and is built on the declivity o a ſteep mountain. The river forms a barred harbour, the entrance o which is difficult and dangerous, and requires a pilot and great care t navigate a veſſel, on account of ſome ſand-banks and rocks ; and is, on thi account, ſo ſecure from approaches of an enemy by ſea, that the Portu gueſe government has not thought proper to fortify it in any degree com plete, having only an old wall, five or ſix feet thick, flanked with, here an there, a mean tower ; the other fortifications are, a ſmall fort, with fou baſtions and a half moon. The road is ſpacious, and will contain a larg fleet ; that from Brazil ſometimes rides here. The town, as to its ſitu tion, is uneven, but is, in general, handſome : next to Liſbon, it is th richeſt, moſt populous, and moſt commercial town in the kingdom ; an without any exception, is accounted the cleaneſt, and is well paved. ORAN, or Warran, a town of Africa, in the province of Tremecen or Tlemſan. It is built on the declivity and near the foot of a high mountain, which overlooks it from the north and north-weſt; and upon the ridge of this mountain there are two caſtles, that command the city on the one ſide, and the Mers' el Kebeer on the other. To the ſouth and ſouth-eaſt, there are two other caſtles, erected upon the ſame level with the lower part of the city, but are ſeparated from it by a deep winding vally, which ſerves it as a natural trench on the ſouth ſide; where likewiſe, at a little diſtance, there is a very plentiful ſpring of excellent water. The rivulet formed by this fountain, conforms its courſe to the ſeveral windings of the vally; and paſſing afterwards under the walls of the city, liberally ſupplies it with water. In the year 1509, it was taken by the Spaniards, under the command of Cardinal Ximenes, then prime miniſter, and remained in their poſſeſſion, till the diſturbances brought into Spain by the ſucceſſion war, in 1708, when the Algerines took advantage of the occaſion, and retook it; neither did they ſpare any coſt or pains to preſerve it: being always furniſhed with a large garriſon, and a number of other choice troops. Nevertheleſs, in the year 1732, it was recovered by the Spaniards, in whoſe poſſeſſion it has ſtill continued. Oran muſt undoubtedly be a place of great ſtrength, as well by nature as art, much more tenable than Algiers; neither could it have been ſo eaſily taken the firſt time, if an unaccountable panic had not ſeized upon the bey, otherwiſe a very valiant man, in abandoning it upon the firſt landing of the Spaniards, without ſhutting the gates, or ſhowing the leaſt preparation to oppoſe them. The Spaniards, when they were firſt maſters of the place, built ſeveral beautiful churches, and other edifices, in the manner and ſtyle of the Roman architecture, though of leſs ſtrength and ſolidity. They have imitated the Romans farther, in carving upon the friezes, and other convenient places of them, ſeveral inſcriptions, in large characters, and in their own language. Dr. Shaw met with no Roman antiquities at Oran. In the year 1790, this place was almoſt deſtroyed by an earthquake, little beſides the outer walls remaining. The number of perſons who periſhed was eſtimated at upwards of 2000, including 22 officers, and 304 private ſoldiers, belonging to the garriſon: 170 miles SW. Algiers. Long. 18. E. Ferro. Lat. 36. N.

ORANGE, a county of United America, in the ſtate of South Carolina.

ORANGE, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Mouths of the Rhône: before the revolution, the capital of a principality, and the ſee of a biſhop. It once had an univerſity, founded in the year 1365, by the emperor Charles IV. In 1622, Maurice of Naſſau, prince of Orange, cauſed the caſtle, which ſtood on an eminence, to be well fortified; but, in the year 1660, the fortifications, and, in 1673, the caſtle itſelf, were razed, by order of Louis XIV. Some councils were held here, in the years 441, 529, and 1228. Among other remains of Roman antiquities to be ſeen in this place, a fine triumphal arch, and an amphitheatre, are both very remarkable. The principality extends about 10 miles in length, and 7 in breadth. The annual revenue was about 50,000 livres. In the ninth century, this territory was under the dominion of the kings of Burgundy and Arles. In the eleventh it had counts of its own, and ſoon acquired the title of a principality. The ſovereignty of this principality, was, in the year 1598, confirmed to the houſe of Naſſau, by the treaty of Vervins, and in 1678, by that of Nimeguen; and in the year 1697, by that of Ryſwick. William Henry, prince of Orange, was ſtadtholder of Holland, in the year 1672, and created, in 1689, king of England. After his death many heirs ſtarted up, among whom the king of Pruſſia was the moſt powerful; but in the year 1713, king Frederick William, by the treaty of Utrecht, ceded this principality to the houſe of Bourbon. At the cloſe of the year 1714, it was annexed to the government of Dauphiny, the generality and intendency of Grenoble, and the election of Montelimart. In the year 1722, Louis XV. gave it to the prince of Conty. It contained one city, two ſmall towns, and about nine villages, and was exempt from all the uſual taxes in France: 2½ poſts N. ORKNEY ISLANDS, a cluſter of iſlands in the North Sea, ſeparated from the north coaſt of Scotland by the Pentland Frith, about ſix miles wide. Their number has generally been reckoned 30, of which 26 are inhabited: the reſt are called Holms, and uſed only for paſturage; they are ſeparated from each other by narrow ſtraits; ſome are ſandy, others marſhy; ſome abound in moſs, which others want; ſome are mountainous, others are plain: throughout the whole of theſe iſlands, the tides are extremely ſwift and violent, which, perhaps, may be occaſioned by the narrowneſs of the paſſages or channels; ſo that when all the reſt of the ſea is ſmooth, theſe tides roll with vehement billows, and run ſo impetuouſly, as to produce a contrary motion in the ſea adjoining to the land. This is called by the inhabitants Eaſter Birth, or Weſter Birth, according to its courſe. After ſuch an account of the violence of the tides at theſe iſlands, it would ſeem incredible, if it were not fully atteſted, that there ſhould be any communication with the neighbouring iſlands; but it is certain, that the inhabitants almoſt daily ſail from iſland to iſland in ſmall boats, called yoals, and meet but with few accidents, in compariſon to the danger. In ſome places the currents run like the torrents of rapid rivers, and in other places there are ſmooth ſpots on the water's ſurface, ſurrounded with very rough billows. The climate of theſe iſlands is far from being agreeable; for the weather is cold and moiſt, the winter rainy, with but little froſt and ſnow, and the wind will ſometimes blow very boiſterouſly, and the rain come down in torrents rather than drops. In the year 1680, it has been recorded as a matter of a very unuſual and extraordinary nature, that, after a violent thunder-ſtorm, pieces of ice fell there of nearly a foot in thickneſs. Hiſtorians agree in making the firſt inhabitants of theſe iſles Picts, and call Orkney the ancient kingdom of the Picts. Many of the preſent inhabitants uſe the Norſe language, which differs but little from the Teutonic or Pictiſh language, and was in general uſe to the laſt century; but, except in Foula, where a few words are ſtill known by the aged people, it is quite loſt. The Engliſh tongue, with a Norwegian accent, is that of theſe iſlands. Others think they did not ſettle here till the time of Reuther, king of Scotland, when the Picts, joining with a party of the Scots, were repulſed, with the loſs of their king Gethus, and many of the Picts and Scottiſh nobility, with great ſlaughter: but the invaſion of the Britains at the ſame time conſtrained the Picts to fly to Orkney, where they choſe for king, Gothus, their deceaſed ſovereign's brother, till they were able to return to Lothian, and drive out the Britains. After this, they flouriſhed here, and were governed by kings of their own. This government probably ſubſiſted till the ſubverſion of the Pictiſh kingdom in Scotland, in the year 839, by Kenneth II. king of Scotland. They continued ſubject to that crown till the uſurpation of Donald Bane, who is ſaid to have ceded theſe iſlands and the Hebrides to Magnus, king of Norway, for his aſſiſtance, in the year 1099. The Norwegians thus got poſſeſſion of theſe iſlands, and held them for 164 years, and loſt them in the year 1263, by the battle of Largis, between Alexander III. king of Scotland, and Haquin, king of Norway, who died the year after, and was buried in the cathedral of Orkney. While Alexander meditated the reduction of Orkney, as he had before recovered Man and the Weſtern Iſles, Magnus, who ſucceeded his father on the throne of Norway, entered into a treaty with him, to ſurrender all his right to them for 4000 marks, and 400 marks a year; and for the better confirmation thereof, a marriage was ſet on foot between his ſon and Alexander's daughter, to be completed when the parties came to age. This Magnus was for his piety reputed a ſaint, and the patron of this country, where he built the cathedral church of Kirkwall, which is dedicated to him. Alexander gave Orkney to Spiere, earl of Caithneſs, whoſe ſon was alſo earl of Orkney and Shetland, and his daughter brought it by marriage to the Sinclairs, ſucceſſively earls thereof. The Orkneys contain about 23,000 inhabitants, and are divided into three preſbyteries and eighteen miniſtries, ſome containing three and ſome four pariſhes, in all thirty-ſix pariſhes, and twelve inhabited iſles, making parts of pariſhes.

ORLEANNOIS, before the revolution, a fertile province of France, bouned on the eaſt by Gâtinois, on the ſouth by Sologne, on the weſt by Dunois and Vendomois, and on the north by Beace. The principal river, the Loire, paſſes through and divides it in two. Orleans, which gives name to the province, is the capital. The foreſt of Orleans, in this province, contains 94,000 acres. It is now divided, with the Blaiſois and Chartrain, into the three departments of Loire and Cher, the Loiret, and the Eure and Loire.

ORLEANS, a city of France, and capital of the department of the Loiret, on the Loire; before the revolution, the ſee of a biſhop, and capital of the Orleannois. It is now conſidered as one of the largeſt and moſt agreeable cities in France. It contains ſix principal gates, and 22 pariſhes : the houſes are generally ill built. It was taken by Julius Cæſar : in the year 451, it was beſieged by Attila, king of the Huns. The Normans took it twice, in the years 855 and 865. It was afterwards beſieged by the Engliſh, in the year 1429, but the ſiege was raiſed by the conduct of Jeanne d'Arc, commonly called the Maid of Orleans. During the religious war, it ſuffered very much. In the month of April, 1562, it was ſurpriſed by the prince of Condé, and in February following it was beſieged by the duke of Guiſe, who had nearly carried his point, when he was aſſaſſinated. After this a negotiation was ſet on foot, and peace concluded, in the month of March ; which, however, did not continue, for Le Noue ſeized on Orleans in the year 1567, which was followed by peace in 1568. Several councils have been held here ; the firſt in the reign of Clovis. The principal trade is in ſtockings, ſheep-ſkins, brandy, corn, and wine. The number of inhabitants is about 35,000 : 14½ poſts SSW. Paris. Long. 19. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 53. N.

ORMUS, an iſland of Aſia, at the entrance of the Gulf of Perſi about ten miles in circumference. It is, ſtrictly ſpeaking, no better tha a rock of ſalt, the very duſt of the country within-land being white an pure, as well as very pungent to the taſte. Springs there are none, an the ſmall lakes of freſh water are no more than cavities filled with rai which, however, falls but ſeldom in that climate. In this iſland is a goo city, and a ſtrong fortreſs, in which the kings of Ormus formerly reſided who had likewiſe ſome dominions, though not of any large extent, upo the continent of Perſia. It was from its commodious ſituation that became the greateſt mart in the eaſt, to which ſhipping repaired from a parts of the Indies, from the coaſts of Africa, Egypt, and Arabia, be ſides a regular trade carried on by caravans acroſs the country. Th made the ſovereigns of Ormus rich and reſpected, if not great and pote monarchs ; and at proper ſeaſons of the year, there was a prodigious reſo of merchants from all countries, beſides factors that reſided conſtantl there, particularly the Venetians, who drove a great trade in jewe tranſported from thence to Baſſora, and by caravans to Aleppo, or to Su by ſea, then over land, by the Nile, to Alexandria, where they were d livered to the merchants to whom they were conſigned. It was the know wealth and prodigious commerce of this place which excited the Portu gueſe to attempt the conqueſt of it, which they atchieved. As it was n for their intereſt, they did not deprive the king either of his title or of h dominions ; but were content he ſhould retain the one, and pay a tribu for the other. They were, however, abſolute maſters of the town and cit del. The former ſtood upon the ſea coaſt, and conſiſted of about houſes. The ſettled inhabitants were, for the moſt part, Arabians, M hometans, and ſubjects to the ſovereign, a few Indians, who were P gans, and about 100 families of Jews ; ſo that, in all, they were comput at 40,000 ſouls. The fortreſs, or citadel, built on a point of land, exten ing towards the Perſian coaſt, was regular, beautiful, and very ſtrong furniſhed, by degrees, with no leſs than 300 pieces of cannon. Carava from Aleppo ſet out twice a year, in the months of April and Septemb for Baſſora, with a vaſt number of camels, eſcorted by Janiſſaries, a from thence themſelves and their merchandize were eaſily tranſported, ſea, to Ormus. Theſe caravans conſiſted of from two or three to five ſix thouſand perſons, and the wealth they brought was prodigious.
the other hand, the regular trade from Malacca, private ſhips from all pa of the Indies, and the caravans that paſſed through the provinces of Per brought likewiſe the richeſt and moſt valuable commodities in vaſt quant ties. The famous Perſian monarch, Shâh Abbas, had long med tated the conqueſt of this important place ; but, for want of a naval forc found it altogether impracticable. The Portugueſe, now under t dominion of Spain, ſupplied him with a fleet, by their indiſcretio which all the power of his monarchy could not have raiſed, or his poli obtained : in ſhort, they quarrelled with, and inſulted, the Engliſh, w were become lately conſiderable in the Indies. Theſe entered into a trea with the Perſians, furniſhed a ſquadron of nine ſail, with which th blocked up, and battered, the city and caſtle, and landed an army three thouſand Perſians on the iſland. The beſieged had a great ſtrengt and a good fleet, but all was ill managed. The city ſurrendered ſoo ſome writers ſuggeſt through treachery, but it ſeems to have been r ther through indiſcretion and folly : the fleet was for the moſt pa burnt and deſtroyed. After all, the citadel made a good defence, a might have been preſerved, if the governor had not been obſtinate, refuſing to let the ſea through the peninſula which joined the point of la upon which the fortreſs ſtood to the iſland, becauſe it was an expedient th did not occur firſt to himſelf. In fine, after about two months diſpu the garriſon of that important place capitulated with the Engliſh, and th after remaining in their hands almoſt 120 years, Ormus was loſt by t Poruguеſe. It was computed that, excluſive of jewels and rich mercha diſe, the plunder and ready money amounted to above two millions. T articles of the capitulation were but ill obſerved, and the Perſian was n very ſcrupulous in executing the treaty ; ſo that the Engliſh were far fr having their full ſhare of booty ; and of what they did receive the grea part periſhed at ſea. The Portugueſe made an attempt for the recovery Ormus, in which they might have been ſucceſsful, if the viceroy at G had not, through want of capacity, indolence, or pique to the offi who commanded in that expedition, failed in his duty. After once fell into the hands of the Perſians, the place was quickly ruin and the trade transferred to Bander Abbaſſi, or Gambron. Long.

OSNABRUCK, or Oſnaburg (Biſhopric of), a principality of Germany, bounded on the north and weſt by the biſhopric of Munſter, on the eaſt by the counties of Ravenſberg and Diepholz, and principality of Minden, and on the ſouth by the county of Ravenſberg; about 40 miles long, and from 16 to 24 wide. Almoſt half of this biſhopric conſiſts of heath-lands, which yield ſeveral ſorts of turf and paſturage. The beſt ſpot in it lie about Quackenbruck, and is called Artland. This country produces a much rye as ſupplies the neceſſities of the inhabitants, and 500 ſtills. Conſiderable quantities of buck-wheat, ſmall wheat, oats, and almoſt al the barley uſed here are imported from the principality of Minden, and th county of Schauenburg. The breeding of cattle is but ſmall. Out o Eaſt Frieſland, during harveſt-time in particular, large numbers of cattle are brought hither. In this county too is little wood, but, beſides turf, it produces coal. Biſhop Erneſt Auguſtus II. eſtabliſhed a ſalt-work a Diſſen, which belongs at preſent to the electoral houſe of Brunſwick Luneburg. Marble is alſo found here, in plenty; and biſhop Erneſt Auguſtus opened a ſilver mine, but this was afterwards dropped. In th whole country are four principal towns, and three ſmaller, and abo 20,000 fire places or hearths, all which are rated in the regiſter, and i each of theſe two families frequently reſide. The noble and free are no reckoned in this account. The land-ſtates here are the chapter, th knights, and the four principal towns. The land-diets are appointed b the biſhop, and held in the town of Oſnabruck. The inhabitants here ar diligent and induſtrious. Of the peaſants, about the number of 6000 g yearly to Holland, where they mow, till, cut turf, and do other work for hire. The meaneſt of them, notwithſtanding, brings home twenty and the beſt workmen full ſeventy florins. This country is partly addicted to the Roman catholic, and partly to the Lutheran church. Neither the proteſtant, nor the Roman catholic biſhops have a right of reformation; but every thing muſt remain as it ſtood here, on January 1 1624. The pariſhes in it are partly Roman catholic, partly Lutheran and partly mixed. In the whole country no Jews are tolerated. Th greateſt and moſt beneficial occupation of the inhabitants of this countr conſiſts of ſpinning of yarn, and the manufacturing a coarſe kind o linen, which is conveyed by the Hollanders, Engliſh, and Spaniards, t Guinea and America, and annually brings into this country abov 1,000,000 of rixdollars. Other manufactures are wanting. The biſhopric of Oſnabruck is the firſt and oldeſt in all Weſtphalia, being founded by the emperor Charlemagne. At the peace of Oſnabruck, i 1648, it was ſettled that this biſhopric ſhould alternately have a Roma catholic and a Lutheran biſhop; and that the chapter might chooſe an ſelect the former, either from among themſelves or elſewhere; but tha they ſhould always ſelect the latter out of the houſe of Brunſwick Luneburg, and therein, out of the poſterity of duke George, and on the ful extinction of theſe, out of the poſterity of duke Auguſtus. The biſho himſelf is a prince of the empire, and has a ſeat at the diet of the empir in the council of the princes. He is charged in the matricular of the empire, at 216 florins monthly, and to the maintenance of the chamb court, he contributes each term eighty-one rixdollars fourteen kruitze and a half. At the yearly land diet a voluntary donation out of the ca belonging to the foundation, is granted to the biſhop by the three ſtate which ever ſince the year 1729, has amounted at the loweſt to 60,000, a the higheſt ſum to 145,000, and generally to above 100,000 rixdollar The revenues of the chapter are rated at betwixt 90 and 100,000.

OSNABRUCK, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphali and biſhopric of the ſame name, on the Haſe, fortified in the ancie manner. This place conſiſts of the Old and New Town, which ev ſince the year 1306, have been united, and governed by a common magiſtracy. The manner of building here, is antique, and the number its houſes, excluſive of the public and bye buildings, amounts to 120 This town is not populous, not above 500 children being baptized here a year. Its magiſtracy is Lutheran, and re-choſen yearly, on the ſeco of January. Oſnabruck denies the power of the biſhop in matters relating to the church and police, and is alſo poſſeſſed of the criminal juriſdiction, together with the right of fortification, and has a conſiſtory of own, as alſo the exciſe, the collecting of the rates of its burghers, and revenue of about 8000 or 9000 rixdollars yearly. The town-toll was ceded by the town, in the year 1431, to the biſhop, with a reſerve of exemption from toll to the burgherſhip, in order to be rid of the Jews, who this year were accordingly baniſhed. By virtue of the receſs at that time made, the military accoutrements alſo were aboliſhed, and conſequently, all burghers' eſtates declared free. The town is poſſeſſed of the right of coining copper, which in the year 1740, it exerciſed for the laſt time. The epiſcopal palace here, was built by biſhop Erneſt Auguſtus, and belongs to the electoral houſe of Brunſwick Luneburg, who uſually reſigns it to the catholic biſhop for his maintenance. The chancery is no conſiderable building. In the hall of the council-houſe, where the celebrated peace of 1648 was concluded, are ſeen the pictures of divers of the ambaſſadors who aſſiſted at it. In it alſo is ſhown, in a thin folio, the portraits of the biſhops of Oſnabruck, which George Berger drew with his pen; as alſo ſeveral vouchers of the council of Bâle, and three of thoſe large golden coins which were diſperſed by the anabaptiſts, in the year 1534, in order to gain adherents here. The Roman catholics and the Lutherans have each two pariſh churches. Oſnabruck was formerly one of the Hanſe towns, the Hanſeatick vouchers of that time being ſtill kept here in the council-houſe. Its principal ſubſiſtence depends upon its linen trade, which is manufactured in the country, and in the foreign manufactures, which are retailed here. In the year 1665, this town, for the firſt time, received ſoldiers; but it is always ſtipulated between the new biſhop, when he enters on the government of it, and the town magiſtracy, how many hundred men the town is to receive. Oſnabruck, ſo early as the time of Charlemagne, was a conſiderable borough, and in 1082, was environed with walls, and the ſame year, as alſo in 1553, and 1626, beſieged, but not taken; whereas in 1633, it was taken by the Swedes. In the year 1613, the greateſt part of it was deſtroyed by fire. In 1630, biſhop Francis William erected an academy here, conſiſting of thirteen ſeminaries, which were alſo confirmed by the emperor Ferdinand II. and pope Urban VIII. but the capture by the Swedes put an end to it. In the year 1634, the crown of Sweden created count Guſtavus Waſaburg lord of the biſhopric of Oſnabruck, who had alſo a reſidence in the town of Oſnabruck; but, at the peace of Oſnabruck, he renounced all his right obtained over this country during the war, in conſideration of which he was promiſed 80,000 rixdollars, at four ſeveral payments. Oſnabruck was the firſt town in Weſtphalia which received the Lutheran doctrine: 24 miles NNE. Munſter. Long. 25. 24. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 20. N.

OSTEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and the duchy of Bremen: 11 miles NW. Stade.

OSTEND, a ſtrong ſea-port town of Flanders, with a good harbour, which takes its name from its eaſtern ſituation, it is ſurrounded by a great number of forts, ten baſtions, and has four gates. Gobert de Steenlande having taken the habit in the abby of Berlin, at St. Omer's, in 814, gave Oſtend to that monaſtery, then only a ſmall village, with thirty-eight others. It became a town in 1072, when Robert de Friſe built a church, dedicated to St. Peter. In the year 1372, the fiſhermen and other inhabitants built round it a ſimple paliſade. In 1445, Philip the Good ſurrounded it with walls, erected gates, enlarged the town, and made the harbour more commodious. In the year 1583, it was regularly fortified by the prince of Orange, after he had taken Ghent and Bruges. The prince of Parma came to attack it the ſame year, but was compelled to retire, without effecting his purpoſe. In the year 1601, the archduke Albert reſolved to beſiege it, as thinking if he was maſter of that city, he could eaſily overawe the trade of Zealand; and made the moſt vigorous efforts for that purpoſe. Sir Francis Vere, with eight companies of Engliſh troops, had been detached from prince Maurice, who was then beſieging Rhinberg, and had thrown himſelf into the town. Little progreſs was made for ſome months, yet the ſiege went on without intermiſſion, neither the inclemency of winter, the diſcontent of the ſoldiers, nor the intrepid behaviour of the garriſon, could oblige the archduke to give up the enterprize. Both the army without and the garriſon within, ſuffered extremely by ſickneſs and fatigue, the Engliſh in particular; ſo that the garriſon, which at firſt amounted to 7000 men, was, in the ſpace of a few months, reduced to 3000. The outworks were greatly damaged by the enemy, and the unuſual inundations of the ſea, to repair and defend which required the utmoſt exertion and diligence; at laſt, when the beſieged were quite ſpent with fatigue, ſir Francis Vere was informed that the Archduke had appointed the next day for a general aſſault; to avoid the danger, he ſet on foot a capitulation, by which he gained time to reinforce his garriſon, with four companies of foot. Irritated at the ſtratagem of the Engliſh governor, Albert reſolved upon revenge, by ſtorming a breach; the attack was made on the 17th of January, with the utmoſt vigour under Mexia, an experienced Spaniſh officer, and ſupported for three hours; but was at laſt repelled by the beſieged, after the Spaniards had loſt 1000 men. After this the archduke was adviſed to raiſe the ſiege, which the ſeverity of the ſeaſon rendered almoſt intolerable to the troops, but to this he would not aſſent. He ordered barracks to be erected for the accommodation of the ſoldiers; committed the direction of the ſiege to Don Juan de Rivas, and ſet out for Ghent, to concert meaſures for puſhing his operations with ſtill more vigour. The States-General embraced this occaſion to change the garriſon of Oſtend, which was worn out and emaciated with perpetual fatigue and watching. As the enemy had conſiderably relaxed in their diligence, and the communication of the ſea was preſerved open, the ſcheme was executed without difficulty. A freſh garriſon, ſupplied with every neceſſary, accordingly, took charge of the town, under the conduct of colonel Dorp, colonel Edmonds, a Scotchman, and Hertain, a Frenchman. Sir Francis Vere, with the former garriſon, joined the army, under prince Maurice. Rivas practiſed every expedient to prove himſelf worthy of the truſt; but, he was repeatedly baffled by the diligence of Vander Noot, the new governor. At laſt he ſucceeded in reducing three out-forts, which he joined to the quarter commanded by fort Albert, by means of a great platform, mounted with heavy cannon, and ſurrounded with gabions full of earth. The garriſon erected a battery to fruſtrate the effects of this platform, and threw bombs ſo ſucceſsfully as to deſtroy the whole attempt, and coſt the enemy infinite labour and expence. They ſeconded the fire of their battery with a vigorous ſally, in which 700 Spaniards were killed, and an equal number made priſoners. Diſappointed in this deſign, Rivas applied his mind to cutting off the communication between the garriſon and the ſea. Pompey Torgu, the beſt engineer in the ſervice, contrived a kind of floating battery, which would have prevented the entrance of ſhips, provided it could be ſecured from the fury of the waves, by dykes and other defences. To raiſe theſe, above half the army was aſſiduouſly employed for ſeveral days, and when the work was almoſt perfected, Rivas had the mortification to ſee the whole deſtroyed by a ſtorm of wind, [and an inceſſant ſhower of bullets poured out from the heavy artillery of the garriſon. Upon the whole, though no officer ever laboured with more diligence than Rivas, he made but little progreſs, a circumſtance which ſo chagrined the archduke, that he reſolved to commit the conduct of the whole to the marquis Spinola. Before the marquis would accept that honour, he deſired leave to examine the ſtate of the ſiege; for which purpoſe he ſent experienced officers to view the works. Some of theſe diſſuaded him from hazarding his reputation in an undertaking which muſt neceſſarily prove unſucceſsful, from the impoſſibility of cutting off the communication of the garriſon with the ſea. Others were of a contrary opinion; they believed the town muſt infallibly ſurrender in time, and that perſeverance would ſurmount every difficulty. The love of glory ſtimulated Spinola to embrace this laſt opinion. In the month of October, he took charge of the army, and ſoon diſtinguiſhed his capacity. Before the ſpring of the ſucceeding year he advanced his works ſo far, that the States-General plainly percieved that Oſtend could only be ſaved by hazarding a battle, or at leaſt making ſuch a diverſion as would probably oblige the archduke to withdraw his army. The latter was thought the moſt expedient, and the ſiege of Sluys reſolved on by the ſtates. Spinola was called away on this account, but finding it out of his power to reſiſt the ſucceſs of prince Maurice, he returned to the ſiege, and demonſtrated the poſſibility of reducing the ſtrongeſt ſituations. He blew up mines every where, he made violent aſſaults, and hemmed the beſieged within ſo narrow a circle, as determined the fate of Oſtend. Several governors ſince Noot's departure had been killed, and a multitude of inferior officers either ſlain or grievouſly wounded. Almoſt every ſhot from the enemy's batteries now did execution, as the balls fell within a ſmall compaſs, wholly occupied by the troops. At laſt a ſtrong wind from the ſouth-weſt, at high water, gave the finiſhing blow to the works of the beſieged, which being newly erected in the room of others that were demoliſhed, could not withſtand the fury of the waves. They were all overturned, and it was afterwards in vain for the garriſon to reſiſt; however, they refuſed to ſurrender before the ſentiments of the States and prince Maurice were known. A council was immediately called at Sluys, to deliberate whether the relief of the garriſon was to be attempted, or the place immediately ſurrendered. The latter opinion prevailed, and orders were accordingly diſpatched to the governor. The capitulation, in which the garriſon and inhabitants obtained the moſt honourable terms, was ſigned the 20th day of September, 1604, above three years after the town had been firſt inveſted, and it had coſt the lives of 100,000 brave ſoldiers. Some accounts ſay, that the loſs of the Spaniards amounted to 80,000, and that of the beſieged to 50,000. In the year 1658, cardinal Mazarin thought to have taken the city by ſtratagem, and for that purpoſe ſent marechal d'Aumont with ſome ſhips of war, but, he himſelf was taken, with his veſſels, and ſeveral hundred men killed and drowned. In the year 1706, it was beſieged by ſome troops of the allied army, under the command of field-marechal Owerkercke, or Overkirk; the trenches were opened the 23d of June, and 49 pieces of cannon and 26 mortars were employed; the fire was ſo terrible that the marquis de Covarouvias, governor of the place, and the comte de la Motthe Houdencourt, lieutenant-general of France, who commanded in the city, beat the chamade the 6th of July, and on the eighth the garriſon, which conſiſted of ſix battalions of French, two of Spaniards, and one ſquadron of dragoons, ſurrendered on capitulation. The allies, to facilitate the conqueſt of the town, had ſent a fleet commanded by the Engliſh admiral Fairborn, which conſiſted of 12 ſhips of war, two bomb-gallies, and 28 privateers, with proviſions and ammunition, to beſiege the city by ſea, and to prevent its being relieved. The ſtates put in a garriſon of their own troops, and kept it till the year 1715, when, in conſequence of the barrier treaty, they yielded it up to the troops of the empreſs. In the year 1722, the court of Vienna formed an Eaſt India Company, at Oſtend, upon a ſcheme of an Engliſh merchant, named Colebrook, which was repreſented as ſo detrimental to the Engliſh Eaſt India Company, that the houſe of commons immediately reſolved it to be a high crime and miſdemeanour for any Engliſh ſubject to be any ways concerned therein: in the year 1727, by an article of a treaty made at Paris, it was agreed that the charter ſhould be ſuſpended for ſeven years, and in the year 1731, the company was totally diſſolved. It was taken by the French, in the year 1745, after a ſiege of ten days, and reſtored to the empire at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. At the latter end of the year 1792, it was taken by the French republic, but evacuated by them on the 30th of March following. During the ſiege in the year 1706, the town-houſe was deſtroyed; and in 1711, the preſe town-houſe, which is a magnificent and handſome ſtructure, was beg and finiſhed in the ſame year. The magiſtracy is compoſed of a bailiff, burgo-maſter, ſeven echevins, and a treaſurer; the office of bailiff is f life, the others are changed uſually every year, in the month of Septemb They have no freſh water at Oſtend, but what is brought in boats fro Bruges, and preſerved in a great reſervoir near the harbour. OSWESTRY, a town of England, in the county of Salop; formerly walled and defended by a caſtle. It is ſaid to derive its name from Oſwald, king of Northumberland, who was killed here in a battle with Penda, king of Mercia. It has a weekly market on Wedneſday. The number of the houſes in the town is 510, in the whole pariſh 1000: the whole number of inhabitants 4600, of which 2200 are in the town. In the year 1216, the town was burned by king John; and in the year 1233, again deſtroyed by Llewellin, prince of Wales. The grand canal, which forms a communication between the Severn and the Dee and Merſey, paſſes near this town: 18 miles NW. Shrewſbury, and 172 NW. London.

OTABALO, a juriſdiction of South America, in the audience of Quito. The lands are laid out in plantations, and produce great quantities of ſugar. Here are alſo very conſiderable manufactures carried on by Indians reſiding in its villages, who ſeem to have an innate inclination to weaving; for beſides the ſtuffs made at the common manufactures, ſuch Indians as are independent, make, on their own account, a variety of goods, as cottons, carpets, pavilions for beds, quilts in damaſk work wholly of cotton, either white, blue, or variegated with different colours; all which are highly valued, both in the province of Quito and Peru, where they are diſpoſed of to great advantage. The method of ſowing wheat and barley in this juriſdiction is different from that uſed in other parts: for inſtead of ſcattering the ſeeds, as is commonly practiſed, they divide the ground, after it is ploughed, into ſeveral parts by furrows, and make little holes at the ſides of them, a foot diſtant from one another, putting five or ſix corns into each. However tedious this method may appear, it is abundantly repaid by the increaſe. This juriſdiction abounds with horſes and black cattle; and from the milk of the latter, large quantities of cheeſe are made. This country is happily ſituated for paſture, having an infinite number of rivulets, whoſe waters render the plains remarkably fertile. It has alſo large flocks of ſheep, though theſe ſeem to be neglected by the inhabitants. Otabalo is the principal place, and ſo large and populous, that it is ſaid to contain 18,000 or 20,000 ſouls, and among them a conſiderable number of Spaniards.

OTAHA, one of the Society Iſlands, in the South Pacific Ocean, ſituated to the north of Ulietea, and ſurrounded with a reef of rocks, with a good harbour, on the eaſt coaſt, called Obamene, and another on the weſt called Oherura. It was conquered by the king of Bolabola. Long. 151. 20. W. Greenwich. Lat. 16. 33. S.

OTAHEITE, or King George the Third's Iſland, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, about thirty leagues in circumference, ſuppoſed to have been firſt ſeen by Quiros, in the year 1606, and by him called Sagittaria. Captain Wallis was the firſt Engliſhman who diſcovered it in the year 1767. The year following it was viſited by monſieur Bougainville, a French commander: and again by captain Cook, in the years 1769, 1773, and 1774, from whom, as drawn up by Dr. Hawkeſworth, the following account is taken: "The iſland is ſurrounded by a reef of coral rock, which forms ſeveral excellent bays and harbours, where there is room and depth of water for any number of the largeſt ſhips. The face of the country, except that part of it which borders upon the ſea, is very uneven; it riſes in ridges that run up into the middle of the iſland, and there form mountains, which may be ſeen at the diſtance of ſixty miles: between the foot of theſe ridges and the ſea, is a border of low land, ſurrounding the whole iſland, except in a few places where the ridges riſe directly from the ſea: the border of low land is in different parts of different breadths, but no where more than a mile and a half. The ſoil, except on the very tops of the ridges, is extremely rich and fertile, watered by a great number of rivulets of excellent water, and covered with fruit-trees of various kinds. The low land that lies between the foot of the ridges and the ſea, and ſome of the vallies, are the only parts of the iſland that are inhabited, and here it is populous: the houſes do not form villages or towns, but are ranged along the whole border, at the diſtance of about fifty yards from each other, with little plantations of plantains, the tree which furniſhes them with cloth. The whole iſland, according to the beſt information, could furniſh 6780 fighting men, from which, the number of inhabitants may eaſily be computed. The produce of this iſland is bread-fruit, cocoa-nuts, bannanas of thirteen ſorts, plantains, a fruit not unlike an apple, which, when ripe, is very pleaſant; ſweet potatoes, yams, cocoas, a kind of arum; a fruit known here by the name of jambu, and reckoned moſt delicious; ſugar-cane, which the inhabitants eat raw; a root of the ſalop kind, which the inhabitants call pea: a plant called ethee, of which the root only is eaten; a fruit that grows in a pod, like that of a large kidney bean, which, when it is roaſted, eats very much like a cheſtnut, by the natives called ahea; a tree called wharra, called in the Eaſt Indies pandanes, which produces fruit ſomething like the pine-apple; a ſhrub called nono; the morinda, which alſo produces fruit; a ſpecies of fern, of which the root is eaten, and ſometimes the leaves: and a plant called Theve, of which the root alſo is eaten: but the fruits of the Nono, the fern, and the Theve, are eaten only by the inferior people, and in times of ſcarcity. All theſe, which ſerve the inhabitants for food, the earth produces ſpontaneouſly, or with little culture. They had no European fruit, garden-ſtuff, pulſe, or legumes, nor grain of any kind. Of tame animals, they have only hogs, dogs, and poultry; neither is there a wild animal in the iſland, except ducks, pigeons, parroquets, with a few other birds, and rats, there being no other quadruped, nor any ſerpent. But the ſea ſupplies them with great variety of moſt excellent fiſh to eat, which is their chief luxury, and to catch it their principal labour. As to the people, they are of the largeſt ſize of Europeans. The men are tall, ſtrong, well limbed, and finely ſhaped. The women of the ſuperior rank are alſo, in general, above our middle ſtature, but thoſe of the inferior claſs are rather below it, and ſome of them are very ſmall. This defect in ſize probably proceeds from their early commerce with men, the only thing in which they differ from their ſuperiors, that could poſſibly affect their growth. Their natural complexion is that kind of clear olive or Brunette, which many people in Europe prefer to the fineſt white and red. The hair is almoſt univerſally black, and rather coarſe. The men have beards, which they wear in many faſhions, always, however, plucking out great part of them, and keeping the reſt perfectly clean and neat. In their motions there is at once vigour and eaſe; their walk is graceful, their deportment liberal, and their behaviour to ſtrangers and to each other, affable and courteous. In their diſpoſitions, alſo, they ſeemed to be brave, open, and candid, without either ſuſpicion or treachery, cruelty or revenge. They were, however, all thieves; and when that is allowed, they need not much fear a competition with the people of any other nation upon earth. The women always cut their hair ſhort round their ears, and the men, except the fiſhers, who are almoſt continually in the water, ſuffer it to flow in large waves over their ſhoulders, or tie it up in a bunch on the top of their heads. They have a cuſtom alſo of anointing their heads, with what they call monoe, an oil expreſſed from the cocoa-nut, in which ſome ſweet herbs or flowers have been infuſed: as the oil is generally rancid, the ſmell is at firſt very diſagreeable to an European; and as they live in a hot country, and have no ſuch thing as a comb, they are not able to keep their heads free from lice, which the children and common people ſometimes pick out and eat; a hateful cuſtom, wholly diſferent from their manners in every other particular: for they are delicate and cleanly almoſt without example; and thoſe to whom captain Cook diſtributed combs, ſoon delivered themſelves from vermin, with a diligence which ſhowed that they were not more odious to us than to them. They have a cuſtom of ſtaining their bodies, nearly in the ſame manner as is practiſed in many other parts of the world, which they call tattowing. They prick the ſkin, ſo as juſt not to fetch blood, with a ſmall inſtrument, ſomething in the form of a hoe; that part which anſwers to the blade is made of a bone or ſhell, ſcraped very thin, and is from a quarter of an inch, to an inch and a half wide; the edge is cut into ſharp teeth, as points, from the number of three to twenty, according to its ſize: when this is to be uſed, they dip the teeth into a mixture of a kind of lamp-black, formed of the ſmoke that riſes from an oily nut, which they burn inſtead of candles, and water: the teeth thus prepared, are placed upon the ſkin, and the handle to which they are faſtened being ſtruck, by quick ſmart blows, with a ſtick fitted to the purpoſe, they pierce it, and at the ſame time carry into the puncture the black compoſition, which leaves an indelible ſtain. The operation is painful, and it is ſome days before the wounds are healed. It is performed upon the youth of both ſexes, when they are about twelve or fourteen years of age, on ſeveral parts of the body, and in various figures, according to the fancy of the parent, or perhaps the rank of the party. The women are generally marked with this ſtain, in the form of a Z, on every joint of their fingers and toes, and frequently round the outſide of their feet: the men are alſo marked with the ſame figure, and both men and women have ſquares, circles, and creſcents, and ill-deſigned repreſentations of men, birds, or dogs, and various other devices, impreſſed upon their legs and arms, ſome of which we were told had ſignifications, though we never could learn what they were. But the part on which theſe ornaments are laviſhed with the greateſt profuſion, is the breech: this, in both ſexes, is covered with a deep black; above which, arches are drawn one over another as high as the ſhort ribs. Their clothing conſiſts of cloth or matting of different kinds. The cloth, which will not bear wetting, they wear in dry weather, and the matting when it rains; they are put on in many different ways, juſt as their fancy leads them; for in their garments nothing is cut into ſhapes, nor any two pieces ſewed together. The dreſs of the better ſort of women conſiſts of three or four pieces: one piece, about two yards wide, and eleven yards long, they wrap ſeveral times round their waiſt, ſo as to hang down like a petticoat, as low as the middle of the leg, and this they call parou: two or three other pieces, about two yards and a half long, and one wide, each having a hole cut in the middle, they place one upon another, and then putting the head through the holes, they bring the long ends down before and behind; the others remain open at the ſides, and give liberty to the arms: this, which they call the tebuta, is gathered round the waiſt, and confined with a girdle or ſaſh, of thinner cloth, which is long enough to go many times round them, and exactly reſembles the garment worn by the inhabitants of Peru and Chili, which the Spaniards call poncho. The dreſs of the men is the ſame, except that inſtead of ſuffering the cloth that is wound about the hips to hang down like a petticoat, they bring it between their legs, ſo as to have ſome reſemblance to breeches, and it is then called Maro. Upon their legs and feet they wear no covering, but they ſhade their faces from the ſun with little bonnets, either of matting or of cocoa-nut leaves, which they make occaſionally in a few minutes. This, however, is not all their head-dreſs; the women ſometimes wear little turbans, and ſometimes a dreſs which they value much more, and which, indeed, is much more becoming, called tomou: the tomou conſiſts of human hair, plaited in threads, ſcarcely thicker than ſowing ſilk. Sir Joſeph Banks has pieces of it above a mile in length, without a knot. Their perſonal ornaments, beſides flowers, are few; both ſexes wear ear-rings, but they are placed only on one ſide: when we came, they conſiſted of ſmall pieces of ſhell, ſtones, berries, red peas, or ſome ſmall pearls, three in a ſtring; but the beads brought by captain Cook very ſoon ſupplanted them all. The children go quite naked; the girls till they are three or four years old, and the boys till they are ſix or ſeven. The houſes, or rather dwellings of theſe people, are all built in the woods, between the ſea and the mountains, and no more ground is cleared for each houſe, than juſt ſufficient to prevent the dropping of the branches from rotting the thatch with which they are covered; from the houſe, therefore, the inhabitants ſtep immediately under the ſhade, which is t moſt delightful that can be imagined. It conſiſts of groves of bread-fru and cocoa-nuts, without underwood, which are interſected in all direction by the paths that lead from one houſe to the other. The ground on whic the houſe is built is an oblong ſquare, 24 feet long, and 11 wide; ov this a roof is raiſed, upon three rows of pillars or poſts, parallel to eac other, one on each ſide, and the other in the middle. The utmoſt heig within is about nine feet, and the eaves on each ſide reach to within abo three feet and a half of the ground: below this, and through the who height at each end, it is open, no part of it being incloſed with a wal

The roof is thatched with palm-leaves, and the floor is covered, ſom inches deep, with ſoft hay, over this are laid mats, ſo that the whole one cuſhion, upon which they ſit in the day, and ſleep in the night. I ſome houſes, however, there is one ſtool, which is wholly appropriated the maſter of the family; beſides this, they have no furniture, except few little blocks of wood, the upper ſide of which is hollowed into curve, and which ſerve them for pillows. The houſe is, indeed, princ pally uſed as a dormitory; for, except it rains, they eat in the open ai under the ſhade of the next tree. The clothes that they wear in the da ſerve them for covering in the night; the floor is the common bed of t whole houſhold, and is not divided by any partition. The maſter of t houſe and his wife ſleep in the middle, next to them the married peopl next to them the unmarried women, and next to them, at a little diſtanc the unmarried men; the ſervants, or toutous, as they are called, ſleep i the open air, except it rains, and in that caſe they come juſt within t ſhed. There are, however, houſes of another kind, belonging to the chief in which there is ſome degree of privacy. Theſe are much ſmaller, a ſo conſtructed, as to be carried about from place to place, and ſet up occ ſionally, like a tent; they are incloſed on the ſides with cocoa-nut leave but not ſo cloſe as to exclude the air, and the chief and his wife ſleep i them alone. There are houſes alſo of a much larger ſize, not built eith for the accommodation of a ſingle chief, or a ſingle family; but as com mon receptacles for all the people of a diſtrict. Some of them are 2 feet long, 30 broad, and, under the ridge, 20 feet high; theſe are bui and maintained at the common expence of the diſtrict, for the accomm dation of which they are intended. Of the food eaten here, the greater p is vegetable. Of the only animals, hogs, dogs, and poultry, there are by means plenty. When a chief kills a hog, it is almoſt equally divide among his dependants; and as they are very numerous, the ſhare of ea individual at theſe feaſts, which are not frequent, muſt neceſſarily be ſmal Dogs and fowl fall ſomewhat more frequently to the ſhare of the comm people. Captain Cook could not much commend the flavour of their fowl but thought a South Sea dog was little inferior to an Engliſh lamb; the excellence is probably owing to their being kept up, and fed wholly up vegetables. The ſea affords them a great variety of fiſh. The ſmall fiſh, when they catch any, are generally eaten raw, as we eat oyſters; a nothing that the ſea produces comes amiſs to them: they are fond of lo ſters, crabs, and other ſhell fiſh, which are found upon the coaſt; and th will eat not only ſea inſects, but what the ſeamen call blubbers, thoug ſome of them are ſo tough, that they are obliged to ſuffer them to beco putrid, before they can be chewed. Of their vegetables, the principal the bread-fruit, to procure which coſts them no trouble or labour b climbing a tree: the tree which produces it does not, indeed, ſhoot ſpontaneouſly; but if a man plant ten of them in his lifetime, which may do in about an hour, he will as completely fulfil his duty to his o and future generations, as the native of our leſs temperate climate can by ploughing in the cold of winter, and reaping in the ſummer's heat, often as theſe ſeaſons return; even if, after he has procured bread for h preſent houſehold, he ſhould convert a ſurplus into money, and lay it for his children. It is true, indeed, that the bread-fruit is not always ſeaſon; but cocoa-nuts, bananas, plantains, and a great variety of oth fruits, ſupply the deficiency. Salt-water is the univerſal ſauce, no m being eaten without it: thoſe who live near the ſea have it fetched as it wanted; thoſe who live at ſome diſtance keep it in large bamboos, wh are ſet up in their houſes for uſe. For drink they have in general nothi but water, or the juice of the cocoa-nut; the art of producing liquors t intoxicate, by fermentation, being happily unknown by them; neit have they any narcotic which they chew, as the natives of ſome other cou tries do opium, beetle-root, and tobacco. Their only muſical inſtrume are flutes and drums; the flutes are made of a hollow bamboo, abou foot long, and have only two ſtops, and conſequently but four notes. T drum is made of a hollow block of wood, of a cylindrical form, ſolid one end, and covered at the other with ſhark's ſkin: theſe they beat with ſticks, but their hands; and they know how to tune two drums different notes into concord. Among other diverſions, there is a dan called timorodee, which is performed by young girls, whenever eight ten of them can be collected together, conſiſting of motions and geſtu beyond imagination wanton, in the practice of which they are brought from their earlieſt childhood, accompanied by words, which, if it w poſſible, would more explicitly convey the ſame ideas. In theſe dan

they keep time with an exactneſs which is ſcarcely excelled by the beſt performers upon the ſtages of Europe. But the practice which is allowed to the virgin, is prohibited to the married woman. Their principal manufacture is their cloth, which is of three kinds; and it is made of the bark of three different trees: the Chineſe paper-mulberry, the bread-fruit-tree, and the tree which reſembles the wild fig-tree of the Weſt Indies. The colours with which they dye this cloth are principally red and yellow. The red is exceedingly beautiful, and of a brighter and more delicate colour than any we have in Europe. Another conſiderable manufacture is matting of various kinds; ſome of which is finer, and better in every reſpect, than any we have in Europe: the coarſer ſort ſerves them to ſleep upon, and the finer to wear in wet weather. They are alſo very dexterous in making baſket and wicker work; their baſkets are of a thouſand different patterns, many of them exceedingly neat; and the making them is an art that every one practiſes, both men and women. The women make little bonnets of the cocoa-nut leaf, to ſhade their faces, at ſo ſmall an expence of time and trouble, that, when the ſun is again low in the evening, they throw them away. Theſe bonnets, however, do not cover the head, but conſiſt only of a band that goes round it, and a ſhade that projects from the forehead. Of the bark of a tree, called poerou, they make ropes and lines, from the thickneſs of an inch to the ſize of a ſmall pack-thread: with theſe they make nets for fiſhing: of the fibres of the cocoa-nut they make thread, for faſtening together the ſeveral parts of their canoes, and belts, either round or flat, twiſted or plaited; and of the bark of the erowa, a kind of nettle, which grows in the mountains, and is, therefore, rather ſcarce, they make the beſt fiſhing-lines in the world: with theſe they hold the ſtrongeſt and moſt active fiſh, ſuch as bonetas and albicores, which would ſnap our ſtrongeſt ſilk lines in a minute, though they are twice as thick. They make alſo a kind of ſeine, of a coarſe broad graſs, the blades of which are like flags; theſe they twiſt and tie together in a looſe manner, till the net, which is about as wide as a large ſack, is from 60 to 80 fathom long: this they haul in ſhoal ſmooth water, and its own weight keeps it ſo cloſe to the ground that ſcarcely a ſingle fiſh can eſcape. In every expedient, indeed, for taking fiſh, they are exceedingly ingenious; they make harpoons of cane, and point them with hard wood, which in their hands ſtrike fiſh more effectually than thoſe which are headed with iron can do in our's, ſetting aſide the advantage of our's being faſtened to a line, ſo that the fiſh is ſecured if the hook takes place, though it does not mortally wound him. They have an adze of ſtone; a chiſſel, or gouge, of bone, generally that of a man's arm between the wriſt and elbow, a raſp of coral, and the ſkin of a ſting-ray, with coral ſand, as a file or poliſher. This is a complete catalogue of their tools, and with theſe they build houſes, conſtruct canoes, hew ſtone, and fell, cleave, carve, and poliſh timber. The canoes, or boats, which are uſed by the inhabitants of this and the neighbouring iſlands may be divided into two general claſſes; one of which they call ivahahs, the other pahies. The ivahah is uſed for ſhort excurſions to ſea, and is well ſided and flat bottomed; the pahie for longer voyages, and is bow ſided, and ſharp bottomed. The ivahahs are all of the ſame figure, but of different ſizes, and uſed for different purpoſes; their length is from 72 feet to ten, but the breadth is by no means in proportion; for thoſe of ten feet are about a foot wide, and thoſe of more than ſeventy are ſcarcely two. The pahie is alſo of different ſizes, from ſixty to thirty feet long, and, like the ivaha, is very narrow. Their language is ſoft and melodious; it abounds with vowels, and captain Cook's company eaſily learnt to pronounce it: but found it exceedingly difficult to teach them to pronounce a ſingle word of Engliſh; probably not only from its abounding in conſonants, but from ſome peculiarity in its ſtructure; for Spaniſh and Italian words, if ending in a vowel, they pronounced with great facility. As to their religion, they believe the immortality of the ſoul, at leaſt its exiſtence in a ſeparate ſtate, and that there are two ſituations of different degrees of happineſs, ſomewhat analogous to our heaven and hell: the ſuperior ſituation they call tavirua l'erai, the other tiahoboo. They do not, however, conſider them as places of reward and puniſhment, but as receptacles for different claſſes; the firſt, for their chiefs and principal people; the other for thoſe of inferior rank, for they do not ſuppoſe that their actions here in the leaſt influence their future ſtate, or indeed that they come under the cognizance of their deities at all. The character of the prieſt, or tahowa, is hereditary: the claſs is numerous, and conſiſts of all ranks of people; the chief, however, is generally the younger brother of a good family, and is reſpected in a degree next to their kings. Marriage in this iſland, as appeared to us, is nothing more than an agreement between the man and woman, with which the prieſt has no concern. Where it is contracted, it appears to be pretty well kept, though ſometimes the parties ſeparate by mutual conſent, and in that caſe a divorce takes place with as little trouble as the marriage. The morai is at once a burying-ground and place of worſhip. Their weapons are flings, which they uſe with great dexterity, pikes headed with the ſtings of the ſting-rays, and clubs, of about ſix or ſeven feet long, made of a very hard heavy wood. Though this, and the neighbouring iſlands lie within the tropic of capricorn, yet the heat is not troubleſome, nor did the winds blow conſtantly from the eaſt. The tides about theſe iſlands are, perhaps, as inconſiderable as in any part of the world. A ſouth or ſouth-by-weſt moon, makes high water in the Bay of Matavai, at Otaheite; but the water very ſeldom riſes perpendicularly above 10 or 12 inches." Long. 149. 15. to 150. W. OTAKOOTAIA, or Wenooaette, a ſmall iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, about three miles in circumference, diſcovered by capt. Cook in the year 1777. The beach, within the reef, is compoſed of a white coral ſand; the land within does not riſe above ſix or ſeven feet, and is covered with a light reddiſh ſoil; but is entirely deſtitute of water. The only common trees found there were cocoa-palms, of which there were ſeveral cluſters; and vaſt numbers of the wharra. The only bird ſeen amongſt the trees, was a beautiful cuckoo, of a cheſtnut brown, variegated with black. But, upon the ſhore, were ſome egg-birds, a ſmall ſort of curlew, blue and white herons, and great numbers of noddies. Though there were, at this time, no fixed inhabitants upon the iſland, indubitable marks remained of its being, at leaſt occaſionally, frequented. In particular, a few empty huts were found. There were alſo ſeveral large ſtones erected, like monuments, under the ſhade of ſome trees; and ſeveral ſpaces incloſed with ſmaller ones; where, probably, the dead had been buried. And, in one place, a great many cockle ſhells, of a particular ſort, finely grooved, and larger than the fiſt, were to be ſeen. Long. 201. 37. E. Greenwich. Lat. 19. 15. S.

OTCHAKOV, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Ekaterinoſlav, at the mouth of the Dnieper, on the Black Sea. This town was of conſiderable importance to the Turks, and afforded a harbour for their gallies againſt corſairs; and enabled them occaſionally to act againſt the Ruſſians, for which reaſon it was always furniſhed with a numerous garriſon, and was ſtrongly fortified. It was founded by a colony of Mileſians, who gave it the name of Olbis. In the year 1737, it was beſieged by the Ruſſians, under the command of count Munich; the fortifications were in excellent order, and its garriſon conſiſted of a large body of choſen Turkiſh forces; but the count, compelled by the want of fodder for the horſes and other cattle, riſqued an aſſault, and carried it the third day after opening the trenches. The Ruſſians held the place till the following year, when they evacuated it, after having demoliſhed the works. In the year 1789, it was again beſieged by the Ruſſians, under the command of prince Potemkin: the capitan pacha, who commanded an army in the neighbourhood, was unable to afford any relief. It was, however, defended with the ſame perſeverance that the Turks had diſplayed in the other parts of the frontier, and the beſiegers and the beſieged were crowned with alternate ſucceſs. Prince Potemkin was repulſed in an endeavour to reduce the garriſon by ſtorm, on the firſt of September, and he opened the trenches for a regular ſiege four days after his repulſe. After an obſtinate conteſt, in which the Ruſſians at length became expoſed to the rigours of a winter's campaign, the city was taken by ſtorm on the 17th of December. The aſſault was given in conſequence of the powder magazine of the fortreſs being blown up by a ſhell. Six thouſand Turks were killed, and 3000 taken priſoners. The loſs of the Ruſſians amounted to 4000 men. Since that time it has been kept by the Ruſſians, and united to that empire: 200 miles E. Jaſſi, and 376 NNE. Conſtantinople. Long. 50. 20. E. OUDE, a province of Hindooſtan, ſituated on each ſide of the Ganges, bounded on the north by mountains, which ſeparate it from Thibet, on the eaſt by Bahar, on the ſouth by Allahabad, and on the weſt by Agra : according to major Rennel, the dimenſions of Oude, and its dependencies, may by reckoned 360 Britiſh miles in length, from eaſt to weſt ; and in breadth, from 150 to 180 ; and their area is about one-third part of that part of the Bengal provinces ; being to each other in the proportion of 53 to 162. Generally ſpeaking, the whole territory is one continued plain ; and is a continuation of that extenſive level vally through which the Ganges and its branches take their courſe. It is moreover the central part of the ancient kingdom or empire of the Praſii. The capital city is Luckow, ſituated on the river Goomty. The nabob of Oude is in alliance with the Britiſh power ; and a brigade of the Bengal army is conſtantly ſtationed on the weſtern frontier ; thereby anſwering the purpoſes of covering Oude as well as Bengal, and of keeping the weſtern ſtates in awe. It is advanced about 100 miles beyond Lucknow. The whole expence of it is paid by the nabob of Oude, under the name of ſubſidy. It received its name from an ancient city, now deſerted, near Fyzaabad.

OUDENARDE, a town of Flanders, ſituated on the Scheldt; ſuppoſed by ſome to have been built by the Goths, about the year 411. It lies in a valley, on the ſide of a mountain called Kerſelaerberg, which defends the city. It has two pariſh churches, five gates, and many good buildings. They have, in this city, two different juriſdictions; one of the magiſtracy, which is compoſed of a grand-bailly, a burgo-maſter, and nine echevins; the other in the hands of the lords: theſe juriſdictions are ſeparated by the Scheldt. This town was ſo well fortified by Francis de la Noüe, a French Calviniſt, that it obtained the name of Little Rochelle. Frederick du Bourg, the governor, defended it with great courage, againſt the Spaniards, for three months, and ſurrendered it for want of men. It was taken in the year 1658, by the French under the command of the Duke of Orleans, and reſtored to the king of Spain at the treaty of the Pyrennées: but the war being renewed between the two crowns, it was taken by the French in 1667, after three days' attack, and again reſtored at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. It was beſieged in the year 1674, after the battle of Seneff. The Prince of Condé advanced to its relief; and as his army was very much fatigued, the prince of Orange would have marched out of his lines to give him battle. The Spaniards were of this opinion; but the Comte de Souches, who commanded a body of Germans, the next day drew off his troops to the diſtance of a league, which gave the French room to throw all the ſuccours into the town which they wanted, and the prince was obliged to raiſe the ſiege. The city was reſtored to Spain, at the treaty of Nimmegen. In the year 1684, it was bombarded by the French, and a great part of it deſtroyed: but the Baron de Couneres, who commanded in the city, took ſuch good meaſures, that he compelled the enemy to retire with conſiderable loſs. In the year 1698, the confederate generals reſolved to attack the duke of Burgundy near Oudenarde, and were, for that purpoſe, preparing to croſs the Scheldt. Vendoſme propoſed falling upon them while one half of the army only had croſſed the river; but he was thwarted by the duke of Burgundy, who ſeemed confounded and perplexed at this critical juncture, on which his reputation and the ſecurity of France depended. When it was too late, the Duke of Burgundy acceded to Vendoſme's opinion, and declared for an engagement, after almoſt the whole allied army had croſſed the river, and formed on the banks. Vendoſme then remonſtrated that the opportunity was loſt; however, he at laſt conſented, with great reluctance. Grimaldi was ordered to begin the charge with the king's houſehold troops; but finding the rivulet marſhy, he refuſed to advance, and retired to the right. The enemy immediately fell on with incredible impetuoſity, and took the village of Heyne, in which eleven battalions were poſted. The main body of the army ſuſtained the whole ſhock of the confederate infantry with great bravery, and the battle continued for an hour with dubious ſucceſs, until the prince of Orange, with the Dutch infantry, made a motion, and fell on the flank of the French army. Comte Tilly and general Owerkerke had likewiſe made an impreſſion on the right wing. Then the French began to fall into diſorder; nor could all the endeavours of the duke of Vendoſme longer retard the fortune of Marlborough. Alighting from his horſe, he flew among the ranks, called the officers by name, implored them to maintain the honour of their country, and animated the men with his voice and example. His great military talents had never appeared to greater advantage than upon this occaſion, but they proved uſeleſs: his men were driven back on each other with ſuch fury, that the whole army became a ſcene of confuſion. Several regiments were cut in pieces among the incloſures, others threw down their arms. Night interpoſing ſaved a greater part of the army, and furniſhed Vendoſme with an opportunity of drawing off his broken forces towards Ghent. Seeing the troops give way, he prognoſticated a defeat, and had provided a rear-guard of twenty battalions to ſecure the retreat. To this precaution the French owed their ſafety; for the enemy ſent detachments of horſe at day-break in purſuit of the fugitives; but they found the hedges and ditches that ſkirted the road ſo well lined with grenadiers, that it was impoſſible to form. In this action the French loſt 3000 men killed, and 7000 taken priſoners; although the reſt of the army was ſaved by the conduct of Vendoſme. Oudenarde ſurrendered to the French on the 3d of July, 1794: 12 miles S. Ghent, and 24 NE. Lille.

OUDIPOUR, or Meywar, a province of Hindooſtan, belonging to the Rajpoots, about 100 miles in length, and nearly as much in breadth, ſituated to the eaſt of the river Puddah. It is probable that in early times the whole Rajpootana conſtituted one entire kingdom or empire, under the rana or prince of Oudipour, who has in all times, ſince we had any knowledge of hiſtory, been conſidered as the head of the Rajpoot ſtates. A long-eſtabliſhed cuſtom of homage to a temporal prince, from thoſe who do not acknowledge his ſuperiority in any other way, ſeems to prove the exiſtence of real power in the hands of his anceſtors. In modern times the rana of Oudipour ſeems to have been conſidered ſomewhat in the ſame light as the general of the Amphictyons was in Greece. Oudipour is the preſent capital.

The ſoil is for the moſt part marſhy and full of heath, except towards the weſt, where there are ſome corn-lands and ſome paſtures, but not equal to ſome of the other States; and generally lying in common, without incloſure, and almoſt without aſcertained property. Near the rivers, however, there are ſome rich incloſed meadows, which produce good hay. The whole country is flat and low, with the exception of one ſmall ridge, which runs through the country, from north to ſouth. In the latter end of the 10th century, this ſtate became part of the biſhopric of Utrecht, under the name of the Upper Dioceſe. In the year 1528, it was ceded to the emperor Charles V. and erected into a lordſhip. In the year 1580, it acceded to an union with the other provinces. Overiſſel is divided into three quarters, or diſtricts: Salland, Twent, and Vollenhoven; beſides which the country of Drent is dependent on it, and may be conſidered as a part. The principal towns are Deventer, Campen, Zwol, and Vollenhoven, with Aſſen and Coverden, in Drent. The principal rivers are the Iſſel and the Vecht.

OWEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, and duchy of Wurtemburg: 18 miles SE. Stuttgart, and 28 E. Nagold.

OWEY, a ſmall iſland of the Atlantic, near the north-weſt coaſt of Ireland. Long. 6. 21. W. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 3. N.

OWHARREE, a harbour on the weſt coaſt of Huaheine, one of the Society Iſlands, in the South Pacific Ocean. Long. 151. 8. W. Greenwich. Lat. 16. 54. S.

OWHYEE, an iſland in the North Pacific Ocean, the moſt eaſterly and by much the largeſt of the Sandwich Iſlands, and thus deſcribed by captain King: " It is of a triangular ſhape. The angular points make the north-eaſt and ſouth extremities, of which the northern is in Lat. 20. 17. N. Long. 204. 02. E.: the eaſtern in Lat. 19. 34. N. Long. 205. 06. E.: and the ſouthern extremity in Lat. 18. 54. N. Long. 204. 15. E. Its greateſt length, which lies in a direction nearly north and ſouth, is 28½ leagues, its breadth is 24 leagues, and it is about 255 geographical, or 293 Engliſh miles in circumference. The whole iſland is divided into ſix large diſtricts: Amakooa and Aheedoo, which lie on the north-eaſt ſide; Apoona and Kaoo on the ſouth-eaſt; Akona and Koaarra on the weſt. The diſtricts of Amakooa and Aheedoo, are ſeparated by a mountain called Mounah Kaah, or The Mountain Kaah, which riſes in three peaks, perpetually covered with ſnow, and may be clearly ſeen at 40 leagues' diſtance. To the north of this mountain the coaſt conſiſts of high and abrupt cliffs, down which fall many beautiful caſcades of water. We were once flattered with the hopes of meeting with a harbour round a bluff head, in Lat. 20. 10. N. and Long. 204. 26. E. but, on doubling the point, and ſtanding cloſe in, we found it connected, by a low vally, with another high head to the north-weſt. The country riſes inland with a gentle aſcent, is interſected by deep narrow glens, or rather chaſms, and appear to be well cultivated, and ſprinkled over with a number of villages. The ſnowy mountain is very ſteep, and the lower part of it covered with wood. The coaſt of Aheedoo, which lies to the ſouth of Mouna Koah, is of a moderate height, and the interior parts appear more even than the country to the north-weſt, and leſs broken by ravines. Off theſe two diſtricts we cruized for almoſt a month; and, whenever our diſtance from ſhore would permit it, were ſure of being ſurrounded by canoes laden with all kinds of refreſhments. We had frequently a very heavy ſea, and great ſwell, on this ſide of the iſland, and as we had no ſoundings, and could obſerve much foul ground off the ſhore, we never approached nearer the land than two or three leagues, excepting on the occaſion already mentioned. The coaſt to the north-eaſt of Apoona, which forms the eaſtern extremity of the iſland, is low and flat; the acclivity of the inland parts is very gradual, and the whole country covered with cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees. This, as far as we could judge, is the fineſt part of the iſland, and we were afterwards told, that the king had a place of reſidence here. At the ſouth-weſt extremity, the hills riſe abruptly from the ſea ſide, leaving but a narrow border of low ground toward the beach. We were pretty near the ſhore at this part of the iſland, and found the ſides of the hills covered with a fine verdure; but the country ſeemed to be very thinly inhabited. On doubling the eaſt point of the iſland, we came in ſight of another ſnowy mountain, called Mouna Roa, or The extenſive Mountain, which continued to be a very conſpicuous object all the while we were ſailing along the ſouth-eaſt ſide. It is flat at the top, making what is called by mariners table-land: the ſummit was conſtantly buried in ſnow, and we once ſaw its ſides alſo ſlightly covered for a conſiderable way down, but the greateſt part of this diſappeared again in a few days. Accordingly to the tropical line of ſnow, as determined by Mr. Condamine, from obſervations taken on the Cordilleras, this mountain muſt be at leaſt 16,020 feet high, which exceeds the height of the Pico de Teyde, or Peak of Teneriffe, by 724 feet, according to Dr. Heberden's computation: or 3680 according to that of the Chevalier de Borda. The peaks of Mouna Kaah appeared to be about half a mile high, and as they are entirely covered with ſnow, the altitude of their ſummits cannot be leſs than 18,400 feet. But it is probable that both theſe mountains may be conſiderably higher. For, in inſular ſituations, the effects of the warm ſea air muſt neceſſarily remove the line of ſnow, in equal latitudes, to a greater height than where the atmoſphere is chilled on all ſides, by an immenſe tract of perpetual ſnow. The coaſt of Kaoo preſents a proſpect of the moſt horrid and dreary kind: the whole country appearing to have undergone a total change from the effects of ſome dreadful convulſion. The ground is every where covered with cinders, and interſected in many places with black ſtreaks, which ſeem to mark the courſe of a lava that has flowed, not many ages back, from the mountain Roa to the ſhore. The ſouthern promontory looks like the mere dregs of a volcano. The projecting head-land is compoſed of broken and craggy rocks, piled irregularly on one another, and terminating in ſharp points. Notwithſtanding the diſmal aſpect of this part of the iſland, there are many villages ſcattered over it, and it certainly is much more populous than the verdant mountains of Apoona. Nor is this circumſtance hard to be accounted for. As theſe iſlanders have no cattle, they have conſequently no uſe for paſturage, and therefore naturally prefer ſuch ground as lies more convenient for fiſhing, or is beſt ſuited to the cultivation of yams and plantains. Now amidſt theſe ruins there are many patches of rich ſoil, which are carefully laid out in plantations: and the neighbouring ſea abounds with a variety of moſt excellent fiſh, with which, as well as with other proviſions, we were always plentifully ſupplied. Off this part of the coaſt we could find no ground, at leſs than a cable's length from the ſhore, with 160 fathoms of line, excepting in a ſmall bright to the eaſtward of the ſouth point, where we had regular ſoundings of fifty and fifty-eight fathoms, over a bottom of fine ſand. Before we proceed to the weſtern diſtricts, it may be neceſſary to remark, that the whole eaſt ſide of the iſland, from the northern to the ſouthern extremity, does not afford the ſmalleſt harbour or ſhelter for ſhipping. The ſouth-weſt parts of Akona are in the ſame ſtate with the adjoining diſtrict of Kaoo; but farther to the north the country has been cultivated with great pains, and is extremely populous. In this part of the iſland is ſituated Karakakooa Bay. Along the coaſt nothing is ſeen but large maſſes of ſlag, and the fragments of black ſcorched rocks; behind which, the ground riſes gradually for about two miles and a half, and appears to have been formerly covered with looſe burnt ſtones. Theſe the natives have taken the pains of clearing away, frequently to the depth of three feet and upwards; which labour, great as it is, the fertility of the ſoil amply repays. Here, in a rich aſhy mould, they cultivate ſweet potatoes, and the cloth-plant. The fields are incloſed with ſtone-fences, and are interſperſed with groves of cocoa-nut trees. On the riſing ground beyond theſe, the bread-fruit trees are planted, and flouriſh with the greateſt luxuriance. Koaara extends from the weſternmoſt point to the northern extremity of the iſland; the whole coaſt between them forming an extenſive bay, called Toe-yah-yah, which is bounded to the north by two very conſpicuous hills. Toward the bottom of this bay there is foul, coraliy ground, extending upward of a mile from the ſhore, without which the ſoundings are regular, with good anchorage, in twenty fathoms. The country, as far as the eye could reach, ſeemed fruitful and well inhabited, the ſoil being in appearance of the ſame kind with the diſtrict of Kaoo; but no freſh water is to be got here. A party advanced into the land, to the diſtance of three or four miles from the bay: they found the country as before deſcribed; the hills afterwards roſe with a more ſudden aſcent, which brought them to the extenſive plantations that terminate the view of the country, as ſeen from the ſhips. Theſe plantations conſiſt of the tarrow or eddy-root, and the ſweet potatoe, with plants of the cloth-tree, neatly ſet out in rows. The walls that ſeparate them are made of the looſe burnt ſtones, which are got in clearing the ground; and being entirely concealed by ſugar-canes, planted cloſe on each ſide, make the moſt beautiful fences that can be conceived. As they paſſed along, they did not obſerve a ſingle ſpot of ground, that was capable of improvement, left unplanted; and, indeed, it appeared from their account hardly poſſible for the country to be cultivated to greater advantage for the purpoſes of the inhabitants, or made to yield them a larger ſupply of neceſſaries for their ſubſiſtence. They were ſurprized to meet with ſeveral fields of hay; and on enquiring to what uſe it was applied, were told, it was deſigned to cover the young tarrow grounds, in order to preſerve them from being ſcorched by the ſun. They ſaw a few ſcattered huts amongſt the plantations, which ſerved for occaſional ſhelter to the labourers; but no villages at a greater diſtance than four or five miles from the ſea." It was on this iſland that the celebrated captain Cook, fell a ſacrifice to a miſunderſtanding, or ſudden impulſe of revenge, in the natives, on Sunday the 14th February, 1779.

OWL'S HEAD, a cape on the ſouth-eaſt coaſt of Nova Scotia. Long. 62. 50. W. Greenwich. Lat. 44. 42. N.

OX MOUNTAIN, a mountain of Ireland, in the county of Sligo: 10 miles WSW. Sligo.

OXENBACH, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 9 miles S. Ips.

OXENBERG, a village of Denmark, in the iſland of Funen, near Aſſens, where the count of Oldenburg was defeated, by Chriſtian III. in the year 1535.

OXFORD, a city of England, and capital of the county to which it gives name, the ſee of a biſhop, and an univerſity, ſituated on a gentle eminence, at the union of the Cherwel and the Thames, and anciently ſurrounded with walls, of which conſiderable remains are yet to be ſeen. Oxford was the reſidence of Alfred and his three ſons, and the latter ſtruck money here. It was burnt by the Danes, in the year 979; and a few years after, in the year 1002, the Danes were deſtroyed in the general maſſacre, for which they again burnt the city in the year 1009; and Swain, in the year 1013, laid waſte the country, and frightened the citizens into a ſurrender, taking hoſtages of them. The Danes burnt it a fourth time, in the year 1032. Harold Harefoot was crowned here in the year 1036, and in his three years' reign did all the miſchief he could to this place. The conqueror meeting with a refuſal to his ſummons, and other affronts here, ſtormed the city on the north ſide, in the year 1067, and gave it to Robert D'Oyley, by whom the walls were probably built or raiſed on an older foundation. This ſame D'Oyley erected the caſtle in the year 1071, which from its ruins appears to have been a work of great extent and ſtrength. The empreſs Maud was ſo cloſely beſieged in this caſtle by Stephen, that ſhe was forced to eſcape by night acroſs the frozen Thames, through his army, ſix miles on foot, in a deep ſnow. All its remains are the tower, diminiſhing as it aſcends, and ſerving for a county gaol; the mount, with a large vaulted magazine, now a ſtore cellar, and part of a wall, ten feet thick. In the court are the remains of the hall, where was held, in 1577, the Black Aſſize, ſo called from an infectious diſtemper, brought by the priſoners, whereof near 100 perſons died. King Henry I. built a palace here, on a ſpot called Beaumont, where Richard ſurnamed Cœur de Lion was born. The city thus embelliſhed with buildings, numbers began to flock hither, as to the common mart of learning and virtue; and literature flouriſhed ſo well that in the reign of John, there were 3000 ſtudents who all to a man on a ſudden left the place. This ſeceſſion to Reading, Cambridge, Maidſtone, Saliſbury, &c. in the year 1269, was occaſioned by the king's ſeverity, in ordering to be inſtantly hanged without the walls, two ſcholars, who were impriſoned by the citizens on ſuſpicion, for one who had accidentally killed a woman as he walked colligendi animi gratia. But the inhabitants being ſoon ſenſible of their loſs, ſued for pardon on their knees, at Weſtminſter, before Nicholas the pope's legate, and ſubmitted to public penance in all the churches of Oxford. Upon which the ſcholars, after five years' abſence, returned, and obtained new privileges for their more effectual protection. The origin of the univerſity is involved in obſcurity. According to Camden, even in the times of the Britons, Oxford was the ſeat of learning. Some ſtudents removing hither from Cricklade; a monaſtery was founded by St. Frideſwide, in the time of the Saxons, which was burned, and rebuilt by king Ethelred. When the Danes were reduced by Alfred, that prince is ſaid to have founded three colleges, one for philoſophy, another for grammar, and a third for divinity, in the year 886, ſo that on this conſideration Alfred ſeems rather the reſtorer than the founder. But however that may be, Mr. Camden himſelf gives the precedence in point of time to Baliol college, in the year 1269, by which is probably underſtood to mean the firſt endowed with a regular and permanent income. The univerſity is governed by a chancellor, uſually a nobleman, choſen by the ſtudents for life; a high ſteward, named by the chancellor, and approved by the univerſity, who is alſo for life, and to aſſiſt the chancellor, &c. a vice-chancellor, one always in orders, and the head of a college, who exerciſes the chancellor's power, keeps the officers and ſtudents to their duty, and chooſes four pro-vice-chancellors, out of the heads of colleges, to officiate in his abſence; two proctors, who are maſters of arts, choſen yearly out of the ſeveral colleges in turn, to keep the peace, puniſh diſorders, overſee weights and meaſures, order ſcholaſtic exerciſes, and the admiſſion to degrees; a public orator, who writes letters by order of convocation, and harangues princes, and other great men, who viſit the univerſity; a keeper of its archives; a regiſter, who records all tranſactions of the convocation, &c.; three eſquire-beadles, with gilt ſilver maces, and three yeoman-beadles, with plain ones, who attend the vice-chancellor in public, execute his orders for apprehending delinquents, publiſh the courts of convocation, and conduct the preachers to church, and lecturers to ſchool; a verger, who, on ſolemn occaſions, walks with the beadles before the vice-chancellor, and carries a ſilver rod. Oxford contains twenty colleges, and five halls. 1. Baliol College, founded in the year 1269, by John Baliol, father of John Baliol, king of Scotland, in great part rebuilt in the reigns of Henry VI. and VII.; it conſiſts of a maſter, twelve fellows, fourteen ſcholars, and eighteen exhibitioners. 2. Merton College. Walter de Merton, biſhop of Rocheſter and lord Chancellor of England, transferred to Oxford, in the year 1267, a college which he had built at Maldon, in Surry, three years before. At firſt he ſeems to have only intended this for ſuch of chaplains and ſcholars as ſhould chooſe to come hither from the other; but in 1274, both were united by the founder. It conſiſts of a warden, twenty-four fellows, fourteen poſt-maſters, &c. 3. Univerſity College. The largeſt of Alfred's three halls before mentioned, is by ſome ſuppoſed to have been Univerſity College. But however that be, it is more certain that the reſtoration of this old houſe is owing to the legacy of William, archdeacon of Durham, who died in the year 1249, and left 310 marks to the chancellor and univerſity, for the maintenance of eleven or twelve maſters, wherewith a ſociety was eſtabliſhed in the year 1260, and their ſtatutes ſettled by the univerſity, in the year 1292, and the endowment of Walter Skerlaw, biſhop of Durham, Henry Percy, earl of Northumberland, and other benefactors. It was valued at 78l. per annum, and conſiſts now of a maſter, twelve fellows, thirteen ſcholars, &c. This college has been much enlarged by the generous benefaction of Dr. John Radcliff, who left 5000l. for building the maſter's lodge, and chambers for two new fellows, by him inſtituted for the ſtudy of phyſic, with a handſome ſalary for ten years, half of which time at leaſt they are to travel beyond the ſeas for their better improvement, as his will expreſſes it. 4. Exeter College, founded by William Stapledon, biſhop of Exeter, in the year 1314. It conſiſted at firſt of only thirteen fellows or ſcholars, of whom twelve were to be born within the dioceſe of Exeter. Its revenues were valued, 26th Henry VIII. at 81l. It has now a rector, twenty-two fellows, &c. 5. Oriel College, founded in the year 1324, by Adam de Bromé, almoner to Edward II. Edward III. gave a tenement called Le Oriele, whence probably the name. It now maintains a provoſt, eighteen fellows, and fourteen exhibitioners. 6. Queen's College, the foundation of which was aſcribed to queen Philippa, but is really due to her chaplain, Robert de Eglesfield, rector of Burg on Stanmore, in the year 1340, for a provoſt, twelve fellows, and ſeventy ſcholars. It now conſiſts of a provoſt, twenty-two fellows, &c. 7. New College, or Wincheſter College, or as it ſhould ſeem St. Mary's College of Wincheſter, in Oxford, was founded by the great William Wykeham, in the year 1379, with endowment for a warden and ſeventy fellows, &c. The excellent body of ſtatutes, which the founder himſelf drew up, has been conſidered as the moſt judicious and complete, and has been followed by moſt ſucceeding founders of colleges. 8. Trinity College. Richard Horton, prior, and the monks at Durham purchaſed ground in the year 1290, for a college here, which was afterwards increaſed and farther endowed by Richard de Bury, the learned biſhop of that ſee. A the diſſolution, this college was ſequeſtered, and by Edward VI. ſold Dr. Owen, a phyſician; and afterwards came into the poſſeſſion of Thomas Pope, who on its ſite founded Trinity College, for a preſide twe twelve fellows, and twelve ſcholars. Dr. Ralph Bathurſt, preſident, adorned it with new buildings, and a beautiful chapel, conſecrated in the year 1694, and was otherwiſe an eminent benefactor. 9. Lincoln College. Richard Fleming, biſhop of Lincoln, obtained licence of Henry VI. in the year 1427, to make All Saints Church collegiate, and to found a college for a rector, and ſeven ſcholars; finiſhed and endowed in the year 1475, by Thomas Rotherham, biſhop of Lincoln, and archbiſhop of York, now conſiſts of a rector, twelve fellows, &c. 10. Worceſter College, was founded, in the year 1714, by the benefaction of ſir Thomas Cookes, of Bentley, in Worceſterſhire, for one provoſt, ſix fellows, and ſix ſcholars. To theſe have ſince been added two fellowſhips, and two ſcholarſhips, by Dr. Finney; and two exhibitions for Charterhouſe ſcholars, by lady Holford. But the principal benefactors have been Mrs. Eaton, daughter of Dr. Eaton, principal of Glouceſter hall, who founded ſix fellowſhips in the year 1735. And Dr. Clarke, fellow of All Souls' College, who gave ſix fellowſhips, and three ſcholarſhips, in the year 1736, beſides other conſiderable bequeſts. This houſe was originally called Glouceſter College, being a ſeminary for educating the novices of Glouceſter monaſtery, as it was likewiſe for thoſe of other religious houſes. It was founded, in the year 1283, by John Giffard, baron of Brimsfield. When ſuppreſſed at the reformation, it was converted into a palace for the biſhop of Oxford: but was ſoon afterwards erected into an academical hall, by ſir Thomas White, the founder of St. John's College, in which ſtate it continued, till it at length received a charter of incorporation, and a ſmall endowment from ſir Thomas Cookes. Here are one provoſt, twenty fellows, ſeventeen ſcholars, &c. the whole number about forty. 11. St. John's College. This college was founded in the year 1557, by ſir Thomas White, alderman and Merchant Taylor of London, for the maintenance of one preſident, fifty fellows, three chaplains, three clerks, and ſix choriſters, &c. This college was founded on the ſite of Bernard's College, erected in the year 1437, by archbiſhop Chichely. Archbiſhop Laud and biſhop Juxon were liberal benefactors to this college. 12. All Souls' College, founded in the year 1438, by Henry Chichely, archbiſhop of Canterbury, for a warden, and forty fellows, beſides two chaplains, nine clerks, and choriſters. 13. Magdalen College, founded in the year 1458, by William Patten, alias Wainfleet, biſhop of Wincheſter, for a preſident, forty fellows, thirty ſcholars or demies, a divinity lecturer, a ſchool-maſter, four chaplains, &c. 14. Brazen Noſe College. This college was founded in the year 1509, by Richard Smith, biſhop of Lincoln, and Richard Sutton, of Preſbury in Cheſhire, knight, for the maintenance of one principal, and fifteen fellows. To this number ſucceeding benefactions have added five fellows, thirty-two ſcholars, and four exhibitioners. 15. Corpus Chriſti College. This college was founded, in the year 1516, by Richard Fox, who was ſucceſſively biſhop of Exeter, Bath, and Wells, Durham and Wincheſter; and lord privy ſeal to king Henry VII. and VIII. for the maintenance of one preſident, twenty fellows, twenty ſcholars, &c. 16. Chriſt Church, originally founded by cardinal Wolſey, in the year 1525, for the ſupport of a dean, a ſub-dean, 100 canons, &c. But while the cardinal was completing this deſign, having actually admitted eighteen canons, about the year 1529, he fell into diſgrace; when king Henry VIII. ſeized upon the foundation, which he ſuſpended till the year 1532, and then re-eſtabliſhed it under the name of Henry the Eighth's College, for one dean, and twelve canons. This foundation, however, the ſame king ſuppreſſed in the year 1545. But the next year he removed hither the epiſcopal ſee, firſt eſtabliſhed in Oſeney abby, a diſſolved Auguſtine monaſtery, near the ſuburbs of Oxford, in the year 1542. At the ſame time, on part of Wolſey's original revenue, he conſtituted a dean, eight canons, eight chaplains, eight clerks, eight choriſters, and an organiſt; together with ſixty ſtudents, and forty grammar-ſcholars, a ſchool-maſter and uſher. In this form the foundation has remained ever ſince; except, that queen Elizabeth, in the year 1561, converted the forty grammar-ſcholars into academical ſtudents; ordering, at the ſame time, that their vacancies ſhould be ſupplied from Weſtminſter ſchool. Thus, 100 ſtudents were eſtabliſhed, to which number William Thurſtone, eſquire, in the year 1663, added one. 17. Jeſus College, founded in the year 1571, by queen Elizabeth, and endowed by Hugh Price, LL.D. a native of the county of Brecknock, and treaſurer of St. David's, for a principal, eight fellows, and eight ſcholars; by other benefactors raiſed to nineteen fellows, and eighteen ſcholars, with many exhibitioners. 18. Wadham College. This college was deſigned by Nicholas Wadham, eſquire, of Merifield in Somerſetſhire, and executed in purſuance of his laſt will, by Dorothy, his widow, in the year 1613, for the maintenance of one warden, fifteen fellows, fifteen ſcholars, two chaplains, and two clerks. The ſtatutes direct, that the warden ſhall quit the college in caſe of marriage; that the fellows ſhall enjoy the benefit of the ſociety, no longer than eighteen years after their regency in arts. 19. Pembroke College. This college was founded in the year 1620, by the joint benefaction of Thomas Teſdale, of Glympton, in Oxfordſhire, and Richard Wightwick, S.T.B. rector of Ilſley, Berks; for one maſter, ten fellows, and ten ſcholars. The ſociety has ſince been much enlarged by the addition of ſeveral fellowſhips, ſcholarſhips, and exhibitions. This college was originally Broadgate Hall, famous for the ſtudy of the civil law, a flouriſhing houſe of learning, in which, to mention no more, Camden received part of his education. It obtained the name of Pembroke College, from the memorable earl of Pembroke, who was chancellor of the univerſity when the college was founded, and whoſe intereſt was particularly inſtrumental in its eſtabliſhment. 20. Hertford College, formerly called Hartford or Hart Hall, founded by Walter Stapleton, biſhop of Exeter, in the year 1312, and belonged to Exeter College. Having received a charter of incorporation from Dr. Richard Newton, a late learned and public ſpirited principal, who has alſo conſigned an eſtate towards its endowment, this ancient hotel was converted into a college, September 8, 1740. The foundation conſiſts of a principal, four ſenior fellows or tutors, and junior fellows or aſſiſtants, beſide a certain number of ſtudents or ſcholars. Of the numerous halls, hoſtels, or inns, which were the only academical houſes originally poſſeſſed by the ſtudents of Oxford, only five ſubſiſt at preſent. Theſe ſocieties are neither endowed nor incorporated. They are ſubject to their reſpective principals, whoſe ſalary ariſes from the room-rent of the houſe. The principals are appointed by the chancellor of the univerſity; that of Edmond Hall excepted, who is nominated by Queen's College, under whoſe patronage Edmond Hall ſtill remains. The reſt were formerly dependent on particular colleges. 1. Alban Hall. This hall is contiguous to Merton College, on the eaſt. It appears to have been a houſe of learning, in the reign of Edward I. and received its name from Robert de St. Alban, a citizen of Oxford; who, in the reign of Henry III. conveyed this tenement to the nuns of Littlemore. 2. St. Edmund's Hall. This hall is ſituated to the eaſt of Queen's College. It was firſt eſtabliſhed about the reign of Edward III. and was conſigned to Queen's College, in the year 1557. 3. St. Mary Hall. This was long the parſonage-houſe of the rectors of St. Mary, which church being appropriated by Edward III. to the Oriel College, the houſe alſo came into their poſſeſſion, and was appropriated to the reſidence of ſtudents. 4. New Inn Hall, granted to ſtudents by John Trillock, biſhop of Hereford, in the year 1545. 5. Magdalen Hall. This hall is almoſt contiguous to Magdalen College, on the weſt. A very conſiderable part of it is the grammar-ſchool for the choriſters of Magdalen College, erected, with the college, by the founder, William of Wainfleet, for that purpoſe alone. To this ſtructure other buildings being added, it grew by degrees into an academical hall. Other public buildings are, the theatre, which was built at the expence of archbiſhop Sheldon, chancellor of the univerſity, 1668, who gave 2000l. to purchaſe lands for its repairs. It is extremely magnificent, of the form of the Roman theatre, not circular but having one flat ſide, and the roof eighty feet by ſeventy, reſts on the walls without pillars. Aſhmole's Muſeum, the lower part of which is an elaboratory, and the upper ſtory a repoſitory of natural and artificial rarities, principally given by Elias Aſhmole, who lodged here the collection of MSS. made by his father-in-law, ſir William Dugdale, Anthony Wood, ſir Henry Savile, and himſelf. The printing-houſe, built in the year 1712, with the profits of the ſale of lord Clarendon's Hiſtory of the Rebellion, the perpetual impreſſion of which he gave to the univerſity. Round the wall that formerly incloſed the theatre ſtood the Arundelian marbles, now removed into the ſchools. Theſe valuable monuments collected in Greece and Aſia, by Thomas earl of Arundel, and ſir William Petty, were given by the ſaid earl; others by Mr. Selden, ſir George Wheler, Dr. Shaw, Meſſrs. Dawkins and Wood, and Dr. Rawlinſon. To this collection, in the year 1755, were added, by the gift of the counteſs of Pomfret, above 100 ſtatues, buſts, &c. purchaſed by her late huſband's father, lord Lempſter, out of the Arundelian collection. The whole collection now at Oxford conſiſts of 167 marbles, that is, ſtatues, buſts, bas-reliefs, and fragments of ſculpture; 100 inſcriptions, Greek, Ægyptian, Citiean, and Palmyrene; and 145 Roman and others. The public ſchools, which form a magnificent quadrangle, part of which is appropriated for the reception of the celebrated Bodleian library. The Radcliffe library, founded by the will of Dr. Radcliffe, and finiſhed in the year 1749. A ſtupendous aſtronomical obſervatory has lately been erected at the north-weſt corner of the city, at the expence of near 30,000l. begun in the year 1771, by the truſtees of Dr. Radcliffe's eſtate. The phyſic-garden was founded by Henry Danvers, earl of Danby, in the year 1632, and endowed with an annual revenue. Dr. Sherard built the preſent library, furniſhed the gardens with moſt of its curious plants, and at the expence of 3000l. endowed the profeſſorſhip. The unfortunate Charles I. held his court here, during the civil war. The corporation conſiſts of a mayor, high-ſteward, recorder, four aldermen, eight aſſiſtants, two bailiffs, a town-clerk, two chamberlains, all that have ſerved the office of bailiff and chamberlain, and twenty-four common-council men. The mayor, for the time being, officiates at a coronation, in the buttery, and has for his fee a large gilt bowl and cover. It was made a biſhop's ſee by king Henry VIII. and has thirteen elegant pariſh churches, beſides the cathedral of Chriſt Church. This city has often been the ſeat of our kings and parliaments: in one of which, held here by reaſon of the plague at London, in 1665, the votes were firſt printed. The markets are on Wedneſday and Saturday. The city and the univerſity ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament. Without the town there are many ruins of the fortifications erected in the late civil wars. It has lately been embelliſhed with a noble market-place, and a magnificent bridge: 45 miles SE. Worceſter, and 54 WNW. London.

OXFORD, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Jerſey: 28 miles W. Morriſtown.

OXFORD, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maryland: 10 miles S. Talbot.

OXFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north-weſt by Warwickſhire, on the north-eaſt by Northamptonſhire, on the eaſt by Buckinghamſhire and Berkſhire, on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt by Berkſhire and on the weſt by Glouceſterſhire and Worceſterſhire. The form is very irregular: from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt, it meaſures above 50 miles in length, but in breadth it varies much, being in the centre near Oxford barely 7, towards the ſouth about 12, and towards the north near 40. It is divided into fourteen hundreds, which contain one city (Oxford) twelve towns, 207 pariſhes, and about 450,000 acres, of which 309,000 are ſituated to the north, and 141,000 to the ſouth of Oxford. The principal rivers are the Cherwel, the Tame, the Evanlode, the Windruſh, and the Thames, which ſeparates this county from Berkſhire, in its whole extent. The northern corner of the county is chiefly ſtrong deep land, partly arable, and partly in a paſture ſtate, appropriated principally to the dairy. South of the laſt is a very large extent, where the higher land or flat part is ſhallow, and, in general, more or leſs ſtony, in an arable or convertible ſtate; the ſides of the hills a good loam or mixed with clay in a paſture ſtate, and the bottoms, more of the clay, allotted for meadow land, by the ſides of the ſeveral rivers, which add to the fertility and beauty of the county. The ſouth-weſt corner contains the foreſt of Whichwood, great part of which is woodland; and near to that, the ſoil is more gravelly, with parts of black loam and clay, much of which is adapted to paſture and meadow. The ſituation is low and wet, notwithſtanding which there are divers tracts of arable land in this diſtrict. The diſtrict on the north ſide of Oxford is a deep rich ſoil, part arable, part in paſture, and part meadow land. The part contiguous to and ſouth of Oxford, conſiſts of various ſoils, part light and ſandy, and part deep and rich, ſome being arable, and ſome in a paſture and meadow ſtate. In this diſtrict is compriſed a conſiderable tract of woodland. From thence ſouthwards, by the ſides of the Tame river, is a pretty large tract of deep land, the greater part of which is in paſture. Advancing towards the weſt and ſouth-weſt, the land is moſtly in an arable ſtate, chiefly deep and good, but diminiſhing in goodneſs as you approach the Chiltern hills, which form a large tract of land, the ſoil whereof is a mixture of chalk, with ſome loam and clay, but all full of flints. Much land is appropriated to the growth of beech; but there is alſo a conſiderable tract of incloſures, moſtly in an arable or convertible ſtate, with ſome large waſtes or commons, and ſome vallies of meadow-land, bordering on the Thames. Beſides the woods mentioned, the face of the country is marked with little woodland; except in thoſe places which are near to the towns or capital manſions. There are no hills of any ſteepneſs or elevation, except the range of Chiltern hills. The climate of Oxfordſhire may be accounted in general cold, particularly the weſtward part of the north diviſion, where the fences conſiſt chiefly of ſtone walls, and conſequently afford little or no ſhelter. It is cold alſo upon and near the Chiltern hills, eſpecially on the poor white lands, at the foot of the hills; where it is always to be obſerved, that the froſt will take effect ſooner, and continue longer on that ſoil, than it does on the deeper lands, farther ſituated from the hills. The climate of the Chiltern country is moiſt, on account of the fogs, which are more frequent on the hills and woods, than in the vale. The productions of Oxfordſhire are chiefly thoſe common to the midland farming counties. Its hills yield ochre, pipe-clay, and other earths, uſeful for various purpoſes. Corn and malt are tranſmitted from it by means of the Thames to the metropolis. Good cheeſe is made in the grazing parts. The greateſt want in this county was that of fuel; for moſt of the woods with which it once abounded, being cut down or greatly diminiſhed, it was neceſſary to ſupply the deficiency of fire-wood with ſea-coal, brought by a long and troubleſome navigation from London. The intended junction of the Thames with the Trent and Merſey, by a canal paſſing through Oxfordſhire, has now in ſome meaſure remedied this inconvenience. The towns in this county are, Bampton, Banbury, Biceſter, Burford, Charlbury, Chipping Norton, Deddington, Henley, Tame, Watlington, Witney, and Woodſtock. Nine members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. two for the county, four for Oxford city and univerſity, two for Woodſtock, and one for Banbury.

PADERBORN, a city of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and capital of a biſhopric of the ſame name. In the Saxon war, which continued 30 years, Charlemagne, deſirous of putting an end to it, choſe this as a place of abode, fixed his camp here, and erected it into a biſhop's ſee, which was confirmed by Pope Leo. The town, conſequently, became conſiderable, and ſeveral diets were aſſembled here. It enjoyed imperial privileges, carried on a great trade, and was reckoned one of the Hanſe towns. It is at preſent much declined, and its trade inſignificant. In the cathedral were formerly the images of the twelve apoſtles in ſilver, which Chriſtian duke of Brunſwick took away, in the year 1622, and coined into ducats; he alſo took away the ſilver coffin of St. Liborius, for the ſame purpoſe. There are, beſides, a collegiate and two pariſh churches: [illegible] miles S. Minden, and 14 E. Lippſtatt. Long. 26. 1. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 40. N.

PADSTOW, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Cornwall, ſituated on the river Camel, near the Briſtol Channel, with a convenient harbour capable of receiving veſſels of 500 tons at high water. Veſſels trade regularly from London and Briſtol, and conſiderable quantities of ſlate are exported. A monaſtery was erected here in the fifth century: but being much ſubject to the incurſions of the Danes, the monks afterwards retired to Bodmin. Here is a weekly market on Saturday: 19 miles W. Launceſton, and 243 W. London. Long. 4. 50. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 34. N.

PADUA, a city of Italy, and capital of the Paduan, ſituated on a ſmall river, which runs into the Brenta. The Romans granted the inhabitants the rights of citizens, and leave to chooſe a ſenate. It was deſtroyed by Attila, repaired by Narſes, and again deſtroyed by the Lombards: often ravaged, and as conſtantly re-eſtabliſhed. In the year 1406, it was taken from the duke of Milan, by the Venetians, with its territory annexed to that republic. Padua is of large extent, and contains 26 pariſhes, 4 hoſpitals, and 41 convents, 7 gates, 7 ſtone bridges, 9 ſquares, and a great number of beautiful buildings or palaces; yet, for all this, the place is poor, the ſtreets, in general, narrow, dark, dirty, and ill-paved. The univerſity was founded by Charlemagne, and much enlarged by the emperor Frederic II. and pope Urban IV. and was at one time in great celebrity, but is at preſent much declined from its former reputation. Padua is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Udina. The cathedral is well built. The church of St. Antony, the patron of the city, is large and beautiful. The town-houſe was built on the ruins of the ancient ſenate-houſe, of a noble architecture, with a hall 300 feet long, and 100 wide, ſupported by 90 pilaſters in the ſide-walls. Padua is fortified and governed by a podeſtat. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 38,000: a houſe is ſhown which is ſaid to have belonged to Livy, the hiſtorian, who was born here. It is an ancient town, and by ſome pretended to have been built by Antenor, after the deſtruction of Troy: 22 miles W. Venice, and 50 ENE. Mantua. Long. 29. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 23. N.

PADUAN, a country of Italy, bounded on the north by the Treviſan, on the eaſt by the Dogado of Venice, on the ſouth by the Poleſino, and on the weſt by the Vicentin, about 35 miles from north to ſouth, and 28 from eaſt to weſt. It was formerly a part of Lombardy, and the ſoil is eſteemed ſome of the beſt in Italy. The principal places are Padua, Anguilara, Arqua, Campo S. Pietro, Cittadella, Eſte, and Monfelice.

PADULA, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Principato Citra: 14 miles N. Policaſtro.

PAISLEY, a town of Scotland, in the county of Renfrew, on the river Cart, erected into a burgh in the year 1488 by James IV. and governed by three magiſtrates, and ſeventeen common-council. This town began to flouriſh by its manufactures, ſoon after the union ; the principal articles, at firſt, were plaids and coarſe checks, and afterwards linen handkerchiefs. Theſe were ſucceeded by fabrics of a lighter and more fanciful kind, conſiſting not only of plain lawns, but likewiſe thoſe that were ſtriped or checked with cotton, and others that were ornamented with a great variety of figures ; ſome of which laſt articles ſtill continue to be manufactured there. The making of linen gauze was a conſiderable branch of trade in Paiſley, as likewiſe white ſewing-thread, known to the merchants by the name of ounce thread, as diſtinguiſhed from the different kinds of coloured and white thread which have been manufactured chiefly at Aberdeen and Dundee. About the year 1760, the making of ſilk gauze was at firſt attempted at Paiſley, in imitation of that of Spitalfields, in London. The ſucceſs was beyond the moſt ſanguine expectations of thoſe who engaged in it. Such nice and curious fabrics were deviſed, and ſuch a vaſt variety of elegant and richly ornamented gauze was iſſued from this place, as outdid every thing of the kind that had formerly appeared. Spitalfields was obliged to relinquiſh the manufacture. Companies came down from London to carry it on at Paiſley, where it proſpered and encreaſed, it is believed, beyond any manufacture which any town of Scotland could boaſt of. Indeed, it not only became the great diſtinguiſhing manufacture of that town, but it filled the country round to the diſtance of twenty miles ; and the gentlemen engaged in it, had not only warehouſes in London and Dublin, but they had correſpondents upon the continent, and ſhops for vending their commodities even in Paris itſelf. It appears from the beſt calculation that could be made, that in the year 1784, the manufactures of Paiſley, in ſilk, gauze, lawn and linen gauze, and white ſewing thread, amounted to the value of 579,185l. 16s. 6d. and that no fewer than 26,484 perſons were employed in carrying them on. It is difficult to give an exact account of the ſtate of its manufactures at preſent. The ſilk branch has evidently declined, but the muſlin has ſo fa come in its room, and the thread manufacture has conſiderably increaſed. There are ſome others carried on there, of too much importance to be overlooked : for inſtance, conſiderable tan-works, four in number, two ſoap and candle-works, a manufacture of ribbons, and another of inkle or tape. Before the reformation, here was a rich monaſtery ; and the town of Paiſley continued a part of the original or abby pariſh of Paiſley, till the year 1738, when the magiſtrates and council having purchaſed the right of patronage from the then earl of Dundonald, a new church was built, and the town was erected into a ſeparate pariſh. Since which time, two other churches have been erected ; beſides which, there are two large diſſenting congregations in the town, thoſe of the Antiburgher perſuaſion, and the Relief. The number of inhabitants in the three pariſhes, is eſtimated at 24,600. The pariſh of Paiſley is in length, from eaſt to weſt, about nine miles, varying in breadth from half a mile to about three. There are five coal-mines, and free-ſtone quarries abound in the pariſh. In the various weaving branches there were employed at Whitſuntide 1791, in the ſuburbs of Paiſley 1108 looms, which, added to 2494 employed in the town, gives 3602 in all. But it is to be obſerved, that the extent to which the weaving branches are carried on by the manufacturers in Paiſley is not to be judged of from the number of looms in the town and ſuburbs. Beſides about 150 in the country part of the pariſh, there are great numbers employed by them in the neighbouring villages, which are dependent on Paiſley : 22 miles N. Ayr, and 7 W. Glaſgow.

PAKA, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Konigingratz : 7 miles ENE. Gitſchin.

PALATINATE OF THE RHINE, or Lower Palatinate, a cou of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, bounded on the north the electorate of Mentz and Catzenelnbogen, on the eaſt by Catzeneln gen, the electorate of Mentz, the biſhopric of Worms, and a part Franconia, on the ſouth by the duchy of Wurtemberg, and the biſho of Spire, and on the weſt by France, the duchies of Deux Ponts, and S tern, and the county of Sponheim. The greateſt extent about 80 miles. This country indeed is partly mountainous, but yet uncommonly fertile, producing in abundance all manner of corn, pulſe, fruits, cheſtnuts, and walnuts, and having alſo fine paſturage, and a good breed of cattle, together with plantations of tobacco, particularly between Heidelberg and Manheim, as alſo good Neckar and Rheniſh wine. The latter of theſe wines grows chiefly about Bacherach, and likewiſe on the Bergſtraſze. This Bergſtraſze is an agreeable highway, ſituated between Heidelberg and Darmſtadt, which is planted with walnut-trees, and on both ſides has fruitful fields and meadows, intermixed with hills and mountains, which on the right ſide of the road (namely in travelling from Heidelberg to Darmſtadt) run to a conſiderable length, and are covered on the ſummits with woods, but towards the plain with vines. On all parts of the Bergſtraſze alſo grow almonds in great plenty, and in the vineyards up and down are cheſtnut-trees. The Rhine runs partly through the borders of this electorate palatine, partly through its centre. In it alſo, near Germerſheim and Selz, out of the ſands is waſhed the beſt Rheniſh gold, and the gold thus waſhed is looked upon by the elector as a royalty, and accordingly farmed out by him. To this gold the Rheniſh gold florins owe their origin. The electorate palatine contains in it forty-one towns, and ſeveral boroughs. The eccleſiaſtical ſtate has been ſubjected to a variety of alterations; the doctrines of Calvin and Luther having prevailed by turns, after the reformation had been at firſt introduced in the year 1518. In the year 1705, the elector John William made a declaration at Duſſeldorf, relative to the footing religion was to continue upon throughout his whole palatinate; namely that the three religions tolerated in the Roman empire, ſhould enjoy full liberty of conſcience; and in particular that the Calviniſts and Lutherans ſhould be permitted all public and private exerciſe of their religion, together with the parochial and ſpiritual juriſdiction. The name and origin of the palatines, or pfalzgraves, is deduced from the palatia or palaces (in the language of this country called Palzen, Phalzen, or Pfalzen), which the old Frankiſh and German kings and Roman emperors were poſſeſſed of up and down here, and over which they appointed ſupreme ſtewards and judges, who were ſtyled Pfallenzgraves or Pfalzgraves. The addition of by, or on the Rhine, firſt occurs in the year 1093. In the year 1215, the emperor Frederick II. at a diet of the empire at Ratiſbon, inſtead of the pfalzgrave Henry, who was put under the ban, conſtituted duke Louis of Bavaria, pfalzgrave of the Rhine. In the times of the German kings, Henry and Otto I. the pfalzgrave Eberhard adminiſtered the office of ſewer; and though in the days of Otto III. this office was exerciſed by the duke of Bavaria, yet it ſoon after came again to the pfalzgraves, and about the year 1240 was reſtored, and confirmed to them by the emperor Charles IV.: but Frederick V. being put under the ban, the emperor Ferdinand III. conferred the office of arch ſewer on the elector Maximilian of Bavaria; and though Charles Louis, ſon to Frederick V. by virtue of the peace of Weſtphalia, arrived again to the poſſeſſion of the Lower Palatinate, yet Bavaria retained the office of arch-ſewer, and, on the contrary, a new arch-office was inſtituted in favour of the palatinate; namely, that of arch-treaſurer. To the palatinate on the Rhine, and the aforementioned arch-office, is annexed the electoral dignity. The electoral-palatinate, ever ſince the reſignation of Upper Palatinate, to the elector of Bavaria, pays only the half of the electoral evaluation; namely 30 horſe, and 138 foot, or, monthly, 914 florins; to one chamber-term, it contributes 494 rixdollars, 82¾ kruitzers. The principal towns are Heidelberg and Manheim.

PALATINATE (Upper), a part of Bavaria, bounded on the weſt and north-weſt by Franconia, on the eaſt and north-eaſt by Bohemia, and on the ſouth by the duchy of Neuburg and Lower Bavaria. This country, in the twelfth century, belonged to the Dukes of Swabia. They afterwards were annexed to the Palatinate of the Rhine. In the year 1354, a great part was ſold to Bohemia; and after often changing its lords, at laſt by the peace of Baden, in the year 1714, it was ceded to the elector of Bavaria. It gives neither voice nor ſeat in the college of Princes, nor in the circle of Bavaria. Amberg is the capital.

PALERMO, a city of Sicily, in the vally of Mazara, the ſeat of the viceroy, and capital of the iſland anciently called Panormus, ſituated on a bay to which it gives name, on the north coaſt, well fortified, with a harbour, the entrance of which is defended by two ſtrong citadels. The city is very ancient, but by whom founded is uncertain. The preſent city principally conſiſts of two wide, uniform, and well-built ſtreets, each about a mile in length, croſſing each other at right angles, where there is a ſmall octagon ſpace, ornamented with four ſtatutes. The environs abound in fruit trees, particularly oranges, lemons, and Indian figs. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop and an univerſity. It contains many churches, eight royal abbies, five ſeminaries, ſeventy-one convents, and ſeveral hoſpitals. The cathedral is an ancient Gothic building, very large, and ſupported within by eighty pillars of oriental granite, in which are found the tombs of ſome of the ancient Norman kings, and of the emperors Henry V. and Frederick II. of the moſt beautiful porphyry. Anciently, Palermo had two ports, ſpoken of by Polybius and Diodorus, both which were deſtroyed by an earthquake in the year 1327. It has two at preſent, one made in the year 1405, which ſerves for barks; and the other finiſhed in the year 1590, capable of receiving veſſels of war, at the entrance of which a light is fixed. Palermo is commercial: in good years 40,000 bales of ſilk are exported. Here are likewiſe ſome manufactures of ſtuff and ſilk. In the years 1693, and 1726, this city ſuffered very much by earthquakes: 111 miles W. Meſſina. Long. 31. 14. E. Ferro. Lat. 38. 10. N.

PALESCIANO, a town of Italy in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Otranto: 2½ miles SE. Motola.

PALESTINE, or Holy Land, a province of Aſia, bounded on the north by the mountain of Antelibanus, on the eaſt by the river Jordan and the Dead Sea, on the ſouth by Arabia Petræa, and on the weſt by the Mediterranean Sea. In length it is about 170 miles: but its breadth greatly varies, being in ſome places fifty-eight miles, and in others only twenty-two. It comprehends the ancient country of Canaan, conquered by Joſhua, the conductor of the people of God, after the death of Moſes, and was called alſo the Promiſed Land, becauſe it had been promiſed by God, many centuries before, to Abraham, and to his deſcendants. Under Rehoboam, the ſon of Solomon, this province was, by ſeditions, divided into two kingdoms; the tribes of Juda and Benjamin forming the kingdom of Judah; the other ten tribes that of Iſrael. After the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, this country was divided into three parts, called Judea, Samaria, and Galilee. Judea is the moſt ſouthern part, and Galilee the moſt northerly; on which account, Samaria, called at preſent the country of Nablouſa, remained in the middle, and was as it were, the centre of all Paleſtine. Even yet it is conſidered as divided into the ſame three parts. The capital of Judea is Jeruſalem; that of Galilee, the ſmall city of Nazareth; and that of Samaria, the city of Nablouſa, the ancient Sichem, and not the city of Samaria, or Sebaſtan, which at preſent is only a paltry village. To this diviſion we may add alſo that of the Arabs and natives. In the ſouthern part is the country of Gaza, which abounds with beautiful plains, and comprehends the greater part of the tribes of Simeon and of Dan. Next to this is the country of El-khalil, that is to ſay of Abraham the Friend of God. The other diviſions are El-kods, or of the Holy City, which is Jeruſalem; it contained part of the tribe of Judah, and all that of Benjamin. The country of Nablouſa or Samaria, in which was the tribe of Ephraim. The country of Hareté, occupied by that half of the tribe of Manaſſeh which was on this ſide of the river Jordan, and by that of Iſſachar; in this part was the famous plain of Eſdrelon, or Mageddo, called at preſent Margeben-Aamer, or the Field of the Son of Aamer. The country of Nazareth, called Juret Cafre Canna, an appellation it acquired from the name of a governor who once preſided over it, and which contained the greater part of the tribe of Zabulon. The country of Saphet occupied by the tribe of Nephthali: and the countries of Accon, Sur, or Seyd, which comprehended the tribe of Aſher. Paleſtine, at preſent, is known alſo by the name of the Holy Land. The Scriptures deſcribe this country as exceedingly fertile, and abounding with productions of every kind: and the great population of Paleſtine is an evident proof of the fertility of its ſoil. In the time of David, there were 1,100,000 combatants in the kingdom of Iſrael, and 470,000 in the tribe of Judah alone without reckoning thoſe of Benjamin or of Levi. Some writers conclude, therefore, that its inhabitants, comprehending women, children, old people, and thoſe unfit for bearing arms, might amount in all to 8 millions. The land of Canaancontained a prodigious number of cities and villages, as may be ſeen in the 15th chapter of Joſhua, where we are told, that 112 walled cities fell to the lot of the tribe of Judah alone. Of all its ancient cities. however, a few only remain; the reſt being either deſtroyed, or their names given to paltry villages, now almoſt in ruins. The population of this country is alſo greatly diminiſhed; but at preſent no certain calculation can be given of it, as the number of inhabitants continually varies, on account of the Bedouin Arabs, who always come hither at certain periods from Arabia, and the country beyond the Jordan, in order to feed their flocks. If this country has loſt its ancient ſplendor by the deſtruction of its cities, and the decreaſe of its population, it ſtill retains its natural advantages, being beautifully variegated with mountains, hills, and delightful plains. Its climate is exceedingly good. It ſeldom rains here; but this deficiency is ſupplied by moſt abundant dews. The cold is never exceſſive; and if the ſummer heats are great, they are however mitigated by a periodical breeze, which renders them ſupportable. Paleſtine abounds with every thing almoſt that is uſeful or neceſſary for the life of man. It produces wheat, barley, pulſe of all kinds, fruits, wine, and oil, in ſuch plenty, that, though a part only of the country is cultivated, great quantities of theſe articles are diſtributed in the neighbouring provinces of Syria, and even tranſported to Europe, particularly wheat, barley, and pulſe. With regard to domeſtic and wild animals, it produces various kinds, many of which are not known in Europe. Cotton grows here in great perfection, particularly in Samaria and Galilee. Among its productions may be reckoned alſo ſilk, tobacco, drugs, and aromatic herbs. The fields and woods, in the proper ſeaſons, abound with flowers of every ſpecies; but, notwithſtanding thoſe advantages which it enjoys, all Paleſtine is not cultivated with the ſame care as the vaſt plains of Galilee and Samaria. Mr. Mariti, from whom this account is taken, ſays that the mountainous country towards Jeruſalem was more barren than any other part; but there is no reaſon to ſuppoſe that it has always been in the ſame condition. The cauſe of its being at preſent neglected, is the want of population; for the inhabitants have abandoned the mountains, and retired to the plains, where agriculture is attended with leſs labour, and where they find more conveniencies for their cattle. Even in Galilee and Samaria, there are many parts ſtill uncultivated; but, as they abound with graſs, they afford paſture to the cattle, which form the whole riches of the Arabs. Theſe people, therefore, would quarrel much ſooner for a ſheepfold, than for a large tract of country; and indeed the only wars which they carry on, are undertaken in order that they may rob each other of their oxen, camels, ſheep, horſes, or goats.

PALMA, one of the Canary Iſlands, about 20 leagues in circumference, anciently called Capraria, ſaid by ſome to be ſo called from a volcano of that name, though other writers conjecture, that both the iſland and mountain were ſo called from the great number of goats bred here. It is agreed on all hands, that the ſoil is fertile in corn, wine, and ſugar-canes, as well as in fruits, quadrupeds, and birds of all kinds. Nuno de Penna relates, in his Hiſtorical Memoirs, that on the 13th of November, 1677, a little after ſun-ſet, there was a violent earthquake felt for 13 leagues round the iſland, attended with a dreadful noiſe, that continued without intermiſſion for five days: during which the earth was opened in horrible gaps in ſeveral places, but chiefly upon the Mountain of Goats, or Capraria, a mile and a half from the ſea, from whence iſſued a violent fire and fierce flames, which vomited up great ſtones and large pieces of rocks. The ſame thing happened in ſeveral of the adjacent places; and, in the ſpace of 15 minutes, no leſs than 28 dreadful gulfs opened round the foot of the mountain; each of them throwing up flames, ſmoke, and liquid fire. The ſame author adds, that on the 20th of November following, there was a ſecond eruption of the mountain, which in the ſame manner poured forth torrents of melted ſtones and minerals, which ran for the diſtance of ſeven leagues, where, at this day, large heaps of cinders are to be ſeen. All the neighbouring lands were entirely waſted, and the people forced to quit their habitations. This iſland has a handſome town of its own name, and a ſafe harbour, well frequented by the ſhipping of different nations, which come hither for wines; theſe being reckoned equal to malmſey, and by ſome thought the beſt of any produced in the Canaries. Theſe wines, and particularly what is made at a place called Brenin, are bought up with avidity; and of this laſt there is exported to the Weſt Indies, and elſewhere, at leaſt 12,000 pipes a year. Long. 18. The ſoil is very various ; in ſome parts, eſpecially towards the hills or high grounds, we meet with a mixture of cold clay and moſs ; near the ſhore it is generally of a ſandy nature ; rich black loam is alſo to be met with in ſome few places, eſpecially near Kirkwall ; and not only there, but in almoſt every other pariſh in the country, the ſoil is ſhallow, with a bottom of rock that is ſoft and mouldering. In moſt places it is very fertile, conſidering the way in which they manage it. The plough which the ordinary claſs of people uſe, is of a ſingular conſtruction, having only one ſtilt, and ſtrange kind of irons. With this they only ſcratch the ſurface of the ground in the ſpring, for they labour none in winter, nor in harveſt. The only manure they uſe is rotten ware or ſea-weed, alone or mixed with turf, and without ever giving it a ſummer fallow to deſtroy the weeds, with which it is generally over-run. They ſow on it the only grain they have, a ſmall kind of black oats, and a poor ſort of bear, alternately. Kirkwall is the capital. Long. 0. 1. to 0. 37. E. Edinburgh. Lat. 58. 30. to 59. N.

PANAMA, a city and ſeaport of South America, built on the iſthmus of Darien, at the bottom of a large bay of the Pacific Ocean, and the capital of a juriſdiction. The firſt diſcovery of Panama the Spaniards owe to Tello-de-Guzman, who landed here, in the year 1515, but found only ſome fiſhermen's huts, being a very proper place for their buſineſs, and thence called by the Indians Panama, which ſignifies a place abounding with fiſh. This diſcovery was, in the year 1518, followed by the ſettlement of a colony, under Pedrarias Davila, governor of Terra Firma. And in 1521, Panama was conſtituted a city, with the uſual privileges. In the year 1670, it was taken, ſacked, and burned by John Morgan, an Engliſh adventurer. This misfortune rendering it abſolutely neceſſary to rebuild the city, it was removed to its preſent ſituation, which is about a league and a half from the former, and much more convenient. It is ſurrounded with a wall of free ſtone, and defended with a large garriſon of regulars. The houſes were at firſt in general of wood, having but one ſtory and a tiled roof. Without the walls is an open ſuburb, larger than the city itſelf, and the houſes of the ſame materials and conſtruction. The ſtreets both of the city and ſuburbs are ſtraight, broad, and for the moſt part paved. The city was almoſt entirely burnt down, in the year 1737 ; ſince this misfortune, it has been again rebuilt, and the greateſt part of the houſes of ſtone. In this city is a tribunal, or royal audience, in which the governor of Panama reſides. It is the ſee of a biſhop, and contains ſeveral churches and convents. The harbour of Panama is formed in its road by the ſhelter of ſeveral iſlands, where ſhips lie very ſafe, at about 2½ or 3 leagues diſtance from the city. The tides are regular, and is high water at the full and change, at three o'clock. The water riſes and falls conſiderably, ſo that the ſhore lying on a gentle ſlope, is at low water left dry to a great diſtance. The trade of Panama is very conſiderable; it is the port where the ſhips from Lima, Guayaquil, &c. unload the treaſure ſent to Old Spain, and the ſtaple for the goods brought up the river Chagre. This commerce is of the greateſt advantage to the inhabitants, both with regard to letting their houſes, the freight of veſſels, the hire of mules and negroes, who forming themſelves into ſeparate bodies, draw large bales, or any brittle or delicate wares; the roads here, though the diſtance is but ſhort, by croſſing the chain of mountains called The Andes or Cordilleras, are in ſome parts ſo narrow, that a beaſt of burden can hardly paſs along, and conſequently the employing mules in this ſervice would be attended with imminent danger. But this is not the whole of its commerce; Panama, even during the abſence of the armada, is never without ſtrangers, it being the thoroughfare for all going to the parts of Peru by the South Sea, as alſo for the coming from thence for Spain; to which muſt be added the continual trade carried on by the Peruvian ſhips, which bring variety of goods; as meal of different ſorts, wine, brandy, ſugar, tallow, leather, olives, oil, and the like. The ſhips from Guayaquil bring cacao, and quinquina, or jeſuits' bark, which always meet with a quick exportation here, eſpecially in times of peace. The coaſting barks, which make frequent trips from the adjacent ports, ſupply the city with hogs, poultry, hung-beef, hog's-lard, plantanes, roots, and different kinds of vegetables, with which this city is plentifully ſupplied, by the induſtry of others. The dearneſs of proviſions in this city and its diſtrict, occaſioned by the large quantities conſumed, and the great diſtance from whence they are brought, is amply compenſated by the multitude and value of the pearls found in the oyſters growing in its gulph; they are found in ſuch plenty, that there are few perſons of ſubſtance near Panama, who do not employ all, or at leaſt part of the ſlaves in this fiſhery. Moſt of the towns and villages of the province of Panama are ſituated in ſmall plains along the ſhore, the reſt of the country being covered with enormous and craggy mountains, uninhabited on account of their ſterility. This province contains three cities, twelve villages, and a great number of rancherias, or aſſemblages of Indian huts. It has alſo ſeveral gold mines, but they are greatly neglected, the Spaniards chooſing rather to apply themſelves to the pearl-fiſhery, than the mines, as it affords a more certain profit, and at the ſame time is acquired with much greater eaſe. Long. 62. 40. PARAGUAY, a province of South America, in the government of Buenos Ayres, which is alſo called The Government of Paraguay. Paraguay was firſt diſcovered by Sebaſtian Caboto, who coming to the river Plata, in the year 1526, ſailed up the Parana in ſome ſmall barks, and thence entered that of Paraguay. He was ſucceeded, in 1536, by Juan-de-Ayalas, to whom Don Pedro de Mendoza, the firſt governor of Buenos Ayres, had given a commiſſion, together with a body of troops, military-ſtores, and other neceſſaries; and afterwards by his orders, Juan de Salinas founded the city of Nueſtra Senora de la Aſſumption, the capital of the province; but the diſcovery of the whole, and conſequently the conqueſt of the people who inhabited it, being ſtill imperfect, it was proſecuted by Alvarez Nunez, whoſe eminent ſervices, on the death of Don Pedro de Mendoza, procured him the government of Buenos Ayres. There is a number of towns in the province of Paraguay, conſiſting of converted Indians, and entirely under the government of the Jeſuits. The country in which theſe towns are ſituated, is as pleaſant and fruitful as can be deſired, watered with a variety of rivers and pleaſant ſtreams, abounding with timber and fruit-trees, producing abundance of cotton, indigo, ſugar, pimento, ipecacuana, and other things of great value. The plains are full of horſes, mules, black cattle, and herds of ſheep; the mountains contain vaſt treaſures of gold and ſilver; though no mines have been opened or wrought ſince the Jeſuits have been in poſſeſſion of the country. The cotton-tree flouriſhes here in ſo remarkable a manner, that every little village gathers above 2000 arobas of cotton annually, and the Indians are very ingenious in weaving it into ſtuffs for exportation. A great deal of tobacco is alſo planted here. But theſe articles are far leſs advantageous than the herb called Paraguay, which is alone ſufficient to form a flouriſhing commerce in this province, it being the only one that produces it, and from whence it is ſent all over Peru and Chili, where its uſe is univerſal.

PARAIBA, a town of South America, and capital of the juriſdiction of the ſame name, in Braſil, ſituated on the ſouth bank of a river of its own name, three leagues from the ſea, the river being navigable conſiderably above the town, for ſhips loaded with 600 or 700 hogſheads of ſugar. The place was formerly open; but in 1635, it was ſurrounded with ramparts. It has many ſtately houſes, decorated with marble pillars, together with large warehouſes and magazines belonging to the merchants. The mouth of the river is defended by three forts. The French were formerly in poſſeſſion of this territory, but were diſpoſſeſſed of it in the year 1584, by the Portugueſe, who built in it ſeveral places, made many plantations of ſugar-canes, and erected proper ſugar-mills. The whole territory is fertile in ſugar-canes, and abounds in Braſil-wood, cattle, tobacco, cotton, &c: 20 leagues N. Fernambuco. Long. 16. 30. W. Ferro. Lat. 7. 15. S.

PARIS, a city and capital of France. In the time of the Roman before the birth of Chriſt, in that part called the Iſland of the Palace, w a town named Lutetia, or Lutetia Pariſiorum, or ſimply Pariſij, from t Pariſii, a people of Celtic Gaul, who, when the Romans invaded the cou try, themſelves ſet fire to it. The conquerors rebuilt it, but it attain to no great eminence, till the time of Julian the Apoſtate, who enlarg and built a palace in it. It was ſtill farther enlarged by the kings the Franks, and Clovis made it his reſidence. It ſeems to have be afterwards neglected, till about the year 954, when Hugh Capet made the capital of his kingdom, and the place of his reſidence, in which was followed by all the ſucceeding kings. It was about that time divid into four quarters. Philip Auguſtus, in the beginning of the 13th ce tury, built a new wall round it, paved the ſtreets, and divided it into th parts, the city, the ville, and the univerſity. It was farther enlarged the beginning of the 15th century, when it was arranged into 16 qu ters, which Louis XIV, in the year 1702, increaſed to 20. The ſituat is in an extenſive plain, on the river Seine, and, including the ſuburbs, occupies a ſpace of 9000 toiſes in circumference; the number of ſtreets is eſtimated at 875. There are ſaid to be 105 alleys or ſtreets which have no thoroughfare, upwards of 23,000 houſes of from four to ſeven ſtories, without including the public buildings, religious houſes, ſhops, or warehouſes: the houſes are, in general, handſome, and the fronts, for the moſt part, uniform. Before the revolution, it was the ſee of an archbiſhop, and contained 51 pariſh-churches, 20 not parochial, 17 collegiate churches, among which were 13 chapters, 40 chapels, 3 abbies, 22 priories, and 50 convents for men, eccleſiaſtical and ſecular; 7 abbies, 6 priories, and 53 convents for women; 12 ſeminaries, 16 hoſpitals; 10 of them appropriated to children and women, and 6 for deſerted children; an univerſity, 6 academies of ſcience; 3 academies for the inſtruction of young gentlemen, 7 public libraries; 124 companies of artiſans and tradeſmen; 4 royal palaces; upwards of 500 palaces, or houſes inhabited by nobility, and private gentlemen of fortune; 16 principal ſquares, and upwards of 60 inferior: 50 public markets, 60 fountains, 12 bridges over the Seine, 26 quays, 16 gates, &c. That part of the city which is called the ville, is ſituated to the north, the city is ſituated in the centre, and the univerſity to the ſouth. The city is ſurrounded by the Seine, and is compoſed of three iſlands, called the Iſland of the Louviers, the Notre Dame, and of the Palace, which laſt is the ancient city of Paris. The church of Notre Dame, which gives name to the iſland, is a Gothic building, but grand and majeſtic in its appearance, and was the metropolitan. The iſland of Notre Dame is joined to the Iſland of the Palace by a wooden bridge. The Iſland of the Palace takes its name from a building which was formerly the reſidence of the kings, and afterwards was reſigned to the parliament. This iſland communicates with the reſt of the town by 11 bridges, the principal of which, called Pont-neuf, croſſes the two branches of the Seine, and is 168 toiſes in length: it was begun in the reign of Henry III. and finiſhed by Henry IV. In the centre was an equeſtrian ſtatue of Henry IV. in bronze, of a coloſſal ſize, on a pedeſtal of white marble, with a deſcription of ſome of the principal actions of his life. At the end of the bridge which conducts to the Louvre, is a beautiful building, called the Samaritan, which contains an engine for conveying the water of the Seine to the ſeveral quarters of the ville. The Iſland of Louviers is ſmall, and principally filled with ſtore-houſes for wood, and yards for timber. The grand palace called the Louvre, was begun in the reign of Francis I. and ſtill remains unfiniſhed. It is a quadrangular edifice, the court in the centre, forming a ſquare of 65 toiſes. The front was built in the reign of Louis XIV. and is one of the moſt beautiful monuments of his reign. In the large gallery, which is 227 toiſes long, and joins this palace to that of the Thuilleries, are to be ſeen upwards of 180 models of fortreſſes in France and other countries, all performed with the utmoſt accuracy, and ſo natural as to repreſent the ſeveral cities therein deſcribed, with their ſtreets, houſes, ſquares, and churches, and likewiſe all their works, moats, bridges, and rivers, together with the very country adjacent, ſuch as conſiſting of plains, mountains, corn lands, meadows, gardens, and woods. Some of theſe models may even be taken to pieces, that the curious may be the better enabled to perceive the admirable conſtruction of them. Louis XIV. was the firſt who ordered theſe models to be conſtructed, and when any alterations are made in the fortreſſes, the alterations are alſo obſerved in theſe models, or new ones conſtructed with the moſt ſcrupulous conformity to the preſent ſtate of the place. In this palace is alſo the king's printing-houſe, and it contains, likewiſe, the moſt valuable collection of paintings: in it too we meet with ſeveral academies, viz. 1. The Académie Françoiſe, founded in the year 1633, by Cardinal Richlieu, and confirmed in 1637 by the parliament. The object of this foundation is the improvement of the French language. 2. The Académie Royale des Inſcriptions & des Belles Lettres, inſtituted for the advancement of polite literature. In this academy ancient monuments are explained, and the tranſactions of the kingdom perpetuated by medals, inſcriptions, &c. The Académie Royale des Sciences; inſtituted in 1666. 4. The Académie Royale de Peinture & de Sculpture, founded in 1648. The maſter-pieces of the painters and ſculptors admitted into it are diſpoſed in three halls, and marked with the names of the ſeveral artiſts. Here are alſo the pictures of great numbers of celebrated painters: and among the ſtatues, ſeveral of Gyps, taken from antiques. 5. The Académie Royale d'Architecture, founded in 1671. The quarter of the Palais Royal, now Palais d'Egalité, belonging alſo to the city, contains the Palais Royal, built by cardinal Richlieu, betwixt the years 1629 and 1636, and therefore originally called the Hôtel de Richlieu, afterwards le Palais Cardinal. In the year 1639, he made a preſent of it to king Louis XIII.; after whoſe deceaſe, his dowager, with her ſon Louis XIV. in 1643, reſided in it, on which account, it was afterwards called the Palais Royal. Louis XIV. firſt conferred it on his brother Philip, and, after his death, on Philip duke of Orleans. It contains pictures to the value of four millions of livres, purchaſed by the regent duke of Orleans, who placed them in the chief apartments, moſt of which too are hung with red damaſk. The foundation of the collection of paintings was begun by the cabinets of Chriſtina, queen of Sweden, which, after paſſing through ſeveral hands, but always remaining entire and complete, were bought by the regent for 400,000 livres. Here are alſo great numbers of pieces by the moſt celebrated ancient maſters, namely, Raphael, Rubens, Titian, Vandyke, &c. In this palace we meet with the Académie de Muſique, founded in the year 1669. The Palais des Thuilleries (now Palais National) ſo called from a tile kiln, formerly here, communicates, by means of a gallery, with the Louvre, but is a ſeparate ſtructure. It was begun in the year 1564, by queen Catherine de Medicis, and completed in 1600, by Henry the IV. Louis XIV. in 1664, cauſed the inſide to be embelliſhed. It conſiſts of five pavillions and four corps de logis, ſtanding all in a direct line, above 168 toiſes in length, and making a very grand appearance. In the pavillion adjoining to the river, is a ſpacious and magnificent theatre. Its garden is alſo very beautiful, and in fair weather reſorted to by aſtoniſhing crowds of people. Behind the garden, along the Seine, is the Cour de la Reine, conſiſting of three walks, near which on the right hand, are the Elyſian fields, which are planted with rows of trees. In the riding-houſe of the Thuilleries, is the Académie da la Gueriniѐre, where young gentlemen are taught all the academical exerciſes. The palace of Orleans, or Luxembourg, is a magnificent ſtructure, and was rebuilt, in the ſpace of ſix years, by Mary de Medicis, ſecond wife to Henry IV. during her widowhood, though ſhe ended not her days here, but at Cologn, and that too in very great poverty. In its famous gallery are 20 exquiſite paintings, by Rubens, of which one piece, which ſymbolically repreſents the life of this queen, is nine feet in breadth, and ten in length, yet this celebrated painter completely finiſhed them all in two years. This palace has lately been uſed as a ſtate priſon. La Place de Louis le Grand, or des Conquêtes, is of an octangular form, and ſurrounded with houſes, built in an uniform manner, on each ſide, moſt of which make a fine appearance. In the centre ſtood an equeſtrian ſtatue of braſs, of Louis le Grand, which is very juſtly accounted a maſter-piece in its kind, being all of one caſt, though 20 feet two inches in height. No place is ſaid to afford its parallel, not even in Florence or Rome. The ſquare called La Place de Louis Quinze, is remarkable for the execution of the laſt king (Louis XVI.) his queen, and his ſiſter, the princeſs Elizabeth, the duke of Orleans, and many others. The royal library, in the rue Vivien, in the year 1741, contained above 94,000 printed books, and 30,000 manuſcripts, with a cabinet of medals, and a collection of copper-plates, the large folio volumes of which alone form a conſiderable library: theſe, accordingly, are under their peculiar librarian, and among them is an incredible number of the moſt valuable pieces. The quarter St. Denis, is a part of the city, and contains the Hoſpital de la Sante Trinité, inſtituted for one hundred boys, and thirty-ſix girls, who are all to be orphans and natives of Paris, but muſt be healthy and learn trades. The quarter of the Grève is part of the city, and lies on the Seine. It contains the open place called La Grève, where all public rejoicings are celebrated, and malefactors likewiſe executed: and the Hôtel de Ville, the tribunal of which conſiſts of the prévôt des marchands, four échevins, an attorney and counſellor, a ſubſtitute, and a clerk of the court. Over its gate is an equeſtrian ſtatue of Henry IV.: and in the court, under an arcade, one of braſs of Louis XIV. in an erect poſture: in the court alſo is a kind of public chronicle, being an account, in Latin and French, of the moſt remarkable actions of Henry IV. inſcribed in letters of gold, cut on tables of black marble. The arſenal is in the quarter of St. Paul, and conſiſts of many ſpacious buildings, with a foundry, and a houſe for making ſalt-petre; but containing no great number of arms. The Baſtile was built as a fortreſs by Charles V. to defend the city from the Engliſh. It was an old caſtle, with eight towers and a redoubt, but too ſmall to protect the city, and too low to command it, inſomuch that it ſerved only for a ſtate priſon. This place was deſtroyed by the people, in the beginning of the revolution. The univerſity was founded by Charles the Fat, and conſiſts of four faculties: viz. divinity, the civil and canon law, phyſic, and the ſciences. Its head is the rector, who is always choſen from the faculty of the ſciences. The election is renewed every three months, yet many have been known to enjoy that honour for ſeveral years. In the ſuburbs of St. Victor, is the Hoſpital-general, which alſo goes by the name of la Salpatreria, that commodity having been formerly made here. The buildings belonging to this hoſpital are of large extent. In it is a moſt noble foundation for the female ſex, near 7000 of whom are here provided for, and live under the inſpection of ſixty ſiſters, ſubordinate to whom are eighty governeſſes and a conſiderable number of maid-ſervants. Into this place are recived, 1. The foundlings, who take up one ward. 2. Girls and young women, who ſow and knit. 3. A great number of bad women who are compelled here to ſpin wool. 4. Some hundreds of idiots of that ſex who live here in little houſes built in faſhion of a ſtreet. 5. Many other poor women, ſome of whom are kept here gratis, and others pay a ſmall ſum for their ſupport. 6. Delinquents who are confined, but not put to work. To this incomparable foundation alſo belongs the caſtle of Biceſtre, which is ſeated on an eminence, at a ſmall diſtance from the houſes aforementioned, being well defended on all ſides by a wall, of very conſiderable circuit, and contains within it many large buildings and ſeveral open places. In this caſtle are near four thouſand perſons of the other ſex; viz. 1. Poor men, who are entertained here at free coſt. 2. Some who pay for their reception into the houſe. 3. Perſons diſordered in their ſenſes, whoſe ward looks like a village, being built with regular ſtreets. 4. Men and women afflicted with the venereal diſtemper to the number of twenty-five of each ſex at a time. Common priſoners are kept here in a particular houſe, walled in, and every one in a cell by himſelf. The hoſpital de la Pietie, in the rue St. Victor, where poor children are brought up, conſtitutes alſo a part of the Hoſpital-general, and is the place where the governors uſually hold their meetings. Theſe 3 foundations, together with the Hôtel Dieu, have one common fund, amounting to full two millions of livres per annum. On the quarter of St. Benoit is the college of phyſicians, containing five profeſſors. The little châtelet is a kind of antique fortreſs, and at preſent ſerves for a priſon. The abbey of St. Geneviève, was founded by king Clovis, whoſe marble monument is ſtill to be ſeen in the church. In the library are about 60,000 printed books, and among them a few which are old and ſcarce. Here is alſo a pretty valuable cabinet of antiquities and natural curioſities. In this quarter is likewiſe the royal obſervatory, which ſtands in the higheſt part of the city. The Sorbonne is ſituated in the quarter of St. Andre, takes its name from Robert de Sorbonne, its founder, who erected it in the year 1252; but it was Cardinal Richlieu who ſettled its form of government, and built its preſent handſome houſe and fine church, the latter of which is a maſterpiece of architecture. In it may be ſeen the admirable marble monument of this cardinal, on which the celebrated Girardon worked twenty years. The College of the Four Nations, or Mazarin, ſo called from the cardinal of that name, its founder, ſtands on the Seine, and is under the direction of the Sorbonne. The lectures read here are all gratis, and the library has been public ever ſince the year 1688. The Hôtel Royal des Invalides, was erected by Louis XIV. for the relief of diſabled officers and ſoldiers. This foundation derives its æra from 1670, and the following year the ground was laid out for this ſpacious and ſtately ſtructure, and in eight years the whole was finiſhed. It lies on the borders of the country, not far from the Seine, and forms a regular quadrangle of 17 acres. Long. 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 42. N.

PARKSTEIN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and principality of Saltzbach: 17 miles NE. Saltzbach, and 16 N. Nabburg.

PARMA, an ancient city of Italy, and capital of the duchy of the ſame name. The river Parma divides it into three parts, which communicate with each other by means of two bridges; it is ſurrounded by walls, flanked with baſtions and a ditch, filled with water. On the ſouth is a citadel, which is a regular pentagon, and paſſes for one of the beſt in Italy. The roads which conduct to Parma are in a line, and the ſtreets are ſtraight and broad, the houſes well built, and, for the moſt part, painted. The principal ſtreets meet in the centre, and form a handſome ſquare; the new palace was formed on the ruins of the old, and it forms a large maſs of building, without order or ſymmetry. The theatre is one of the moſt beautiful in Italy, and will contain upwards of 12,000 ſpectators, who may diſtinctly hear the actor on the ſtage, without exalting his voice: there is, alſo, a ſmaller theatre, which is ſufficient for the inhabitants. Parma is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Bologna; it contains an univerſity, founded in the year 1599, and a noble academy of ſciences, inſtituted in the year 1601. Here are five collegiate and thirty pariſh churches, beſides the cathedral, many of which contain pictures by Corregio, and other eminent maſters, and forty convents. The principal trade of the place conſiſts in ſtockings, and ſome other articles in ſilk. This city has lately been celebrated for its printing, and the books iſſued from the preſs of Bodoni are exceedingly beautiful. Parma, from its firſt foundation by the Etrurians to the preſent time, has never changed its name. The number of inhabitants is variouſly eſtimated; Berenger conſiders them at 45,000; Mr. Martyn, 37,000: 32 miles SW. Mantua, and 62 SE. Milan. Long. 27. 52. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 47. N.

PARMA, (Duchy of), or The Parmeſan, under this name are included the duchy of Parma Proper, the duchy of Piacenza, and the duchy of Guaſtalla. This country is bounded on the north by the river Po, which ſeparates it from the Cremoneſe and Lodeſan, on the eaſt by the duchy of Modena, on the ſouth by Tuſcany and Genoa, and on the weſt by Gen and the Paveſe; about forty miles from north to ſouth, and from thirty to forty-eight eaſt to weſt. The ſoil is fertile in corn, olives, cheſtnuts, and fruits of various kinds. The paſtures are excellent, the cheeſe and wool in great eſtimation. This country at one time formed a ſpecies of republic, which being divided into factions was the occaſion of many battles, ſometimes ſubject to the popes, ſometimes to the emperors; it afterwards was ſubject to the dukes of Milan, then to the French, and when they were expelled out of Italy, it was re-united to the church. In the year 1345, pope Paul III. granted it to his natural ſon, Peter Aloyſius, or Farneſe, from whom that family ſprung. Elizabeth Farneſe, the only heireſs of the duke, becoming queen of Spain, contrived to obtain the duchies of Parma and Piacenza for her two ſons, and ſo it was ſettled at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, in the year 1748. Piacenza, which ought to have belonged to the king of Sardinia, and Parma, which had been conquered by the houſe of Auſtria, were ceded to the Infant Don Philip, on condition, however, that in default of male heirs, the country ſhould return to thoſe by whom they had been abandoned. The pope, however, never conſented to this, and every year proteſted againſt the inveſtiture.

PAROS, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, and one of thoſe anciently called Cyclades, about thirty-ſix miles in circumference. It contains about 1500 familes, who are ordinarily taxed 4500 crowns; it is well cultivated, nouriſhes a great number of ſheep, and yields wheat, barley, fruits, legumes, and cotton. Before the war of Candi, the inhabitants made great deal of oil: but while the army of the Venetians remained on the iſland, they burnt all the olive-trees. Paros is likewiſe famous for its extraordinary white marble, and had alſo moſt excellent artiſts for working it. The celebrated antiques, called the Chronicle of Paros, are marbles having Greek inſcriptions, performed on this iſland, and bought, in the year 1627, by Thomas Howard, earl of Arundel, who, in the year 1667, made a preſent of them to the univerſity of Oxford, and they are now called the Arundelian or Oxonian marbles. The inſcription is ſaid to be the moſt authentic piece of ancient chronology, being made 264 years before the Chriſtian æra, and contains a ſpace of above 300 years. In this iſland, beſides a great number of churches and chapels, are ſeveral conſiderable villages. A large fleet may lie conveniently and ſecurely in the harbour of St. Maria, but the common anchoring place for the Turkiſh navy is Drio, on the weſt ſide of the iſland. Long. 43. 5. E. PASSAU, a city of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and capital of a biſhopric and principality of the ſame name, on the Danube, where it receives the Inn and the Ilz. It conſiſts of three towns, namely, of that which is properly called Paſſau, and lies betwixt the rivers Danube and Inn; of the Innſtadt, which ſtands on the other ſide of the Inn, being joined with the former by means of a bridge, and ſtanding on the ſide of the ancient town of Bojodurum; and laſtly of the Ilzſtadt, which lies on the north ſide of the Danube, where it receives into it the Ilz. The laſt of theſe rivers runs betwixt the Ilzſtadt and the mountain of St. George, on which ſtands the caſtle of Oberhauſz. From this fortreſs a bridge leads over the Danube into the road to Paſſau. The city on thoſe ſides of it which are ſurrounded by the water is without walls, but towards the land-ſide of Bavaria is fortified both with ramparts and ditches. Paſſau enjoys a very good ſituation for trade. It remained under the power of the Romans, till after the year 475, when it was taken by the Alemanni. After that it fell under the dominion of the Franks, and continued under the government of the dukes of Bavaria. In the year 999, the emperor Otho III. made it ſubject to the biſhop. In 1552, the religious peace, which is uſually called The Treaty of Paſſau, was concluded here, Paſſau is the ſee of a biſhop, formerly ſuffragan of Salzburg, but from the year 1728, only dependent on the ſee of Rome. As a prince of the empire, his aſſeſſment in the imperial matricula is 18 horſe, and 70 foot, or 528 florins. To the chamber at Wetzlar, he pays 94 rixdollars 62½ kruitzers: 82 miles ENE. PASTRANA, a town of Spain, in New Caſtile: 10 miles SSE. Guadalaxara, and 32 E. Madrid.

PATAGONIA, or Land of Magellan, a country of South America, bounded on the north by the government of Buenos Ayres, on the eaſt by the Atlantic, on the ſouth by the Straits of Magellan, and on the weſt by the South Pacific Ocean; extending from the 40th to the 56th degree of longitude, weſt from Ferro, and from the 36th to the 54th of ſouth latitude. This country was firſt diſcovered in the year 1519, by Ferdinand Magellan, who paſſed through the narrow ſea which ſeparates this country from the iſland of Fuego, and the country, as well as the ſtraits, was called by his name, though now more generally known by that of Patagonia. The obſervations made by Magellan and other adventurers, with reſpect to this country and its inhabitants, are extremely imperfect and defective. The people are reported to be of a gigantic ſtature, and, notwithſtanding the inclemency of the climate, to go naked. That they are barbarous, is evinced by their treatment of the few unfortunate Europeans who fell into their hands. They differ, indeed, in manners as they are divided into a great variety of nations. Towards the ſtraits they are ſaid to be perfectly ſavage; on the frontiers of the Spaniſh and Portugueſe ſettlements they greatly reſemble the Chileſians. Some of the inhabitants ſeen by commodore Byron, in the year 1764, he ſuppoſed to be about ſeven feet in height. Captain Wallis, in the year 1766, meaſured one of the talleſt, and found his height to be ſix feet ſeven inches; but he ſays the greateſt part of them was from five feet ten to ſix feet. Their complexion is a dark copper-colour, like that of the Indians in North America; their hair is ſtraight, and nearly as harſh as hog's briſtles; it is tied back with a cotton ſtring, but neither ſex wears any head-dreſs. They are well made, robuſt, and bony; but their hands and feet are remarkably ſmall. They are clothed with the ſkins of the guanaco, ſewed together into pieces of about ſix feet long and five wide: theſe are wrapped round the body, and faſtened with a girdle, the hairy ſide inwards: ſome of them had alſo what the Spaniards call a puncho: a ſquare piece of cloth, made of the guanaco, through which a hole being cut for the head, the reſt hangs round them, about as low as the knee. The guanaco is an animal that in ſize, make, and colour, reſembles a deer; but it has a hump on its back and no horns. Theſe people wear alſo a kind of drawers, which they pull up very tight; and buſkins, which reach from the mid-leg to the inſtep before, and behind are brought under the heel; the reſt of the foot is without any covering. We obſerved that ſeveral of the men had a red circle painted round the left eye, and that others were painted on their arms, and on different parts of the face; the eye-lids of all the young women are painted black. Every one had a miſſile weapon, of a ſingular kind, tucked into the girdle: it conſiſted of two round ſtones, covered with leather, each weighing about a pound, which were faſtened to the two ends of a ſtring, about eight feet long: this is uſed as a ſling, one ſtone being kept in the hand, and the other whirled round the head till it is ſuppoſed to have acquired ſufficient force, and then diſcharged at the object: they are ſo expert at the management of this double-headed ſhot, that they will hit a mark, not bigger than a ſhilling, with both the ſtones, at the diſtance of fifteen yards; it is not cuſtomary with them, however, to ſtrike either the guanaco or the oſtrich with them in chace, but they diſcharge them ſo that the cord comes againſt the legs of the oſtrich, or two of the legs of the guanaco, and is twiſted round them by the force and ſwing of the balls; ſo that the animal, being unable to run, becomes an eaſy prey to the hunters. Each of theſe people, both men and women, had a horſe, with a decent ſaddle, ſtirrups, and bridle; the men had wooden ſpurs, except one, who had a large pair of ſuch as are worn in Spain, braſs ſtirrups, and a Spaniſh ſcimetar, without a ſcabbard; but, notwithſtanding theſe diſtinctions, he did not appear to have any authority over the reſt: the women had no ſpurs. The horſes appeared to be well made and nimble, and were about fourteen hands high. The people had, alſo, many dogs with them, which, as well as the horſes, appeared to be of a Spaniſh breed. Separated in the middle, by the vaſt mountains of the Andes, the country differs as widely as the inhabitants. To the northward of La Plata it is covered with wood, and ſtored with an inexhauſtible fund of large timber; whereas to the ſouthward of that river, the eye cannot diſcover a ſingle tree or ſhrub fit for any mechanical purpoſe; yet even this ſeemingly barren country produces good paſture, and numerous droves of wild horned cattle, and horſes may be ſeen in every diſtrict. They were firſt brought hither by the Spaniards, and the incredible numbers which now cover the face of the country demonſtrates how congenial the ſoil and climates are to their nature. Nothing is related concerning the productions of the earth; and the reader who has conſulted all that has been written by voyagers, will find little to gratify his curioſity or inform his underſtanding.

PATMOS, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, about twenty miles in circumference, and one of the moſt barren in all the Archipelago, without wood, without rivers, and almoſt without gardens; on the other hand, the ſpring-water is pure, and the air healthy. The inhabitants are chiefly Greek Chriſtians, ſailors or ſhip-builders, they ſail as far as Venice, whither they carry cotton, &c. ſtockings of their own manufacture. There are plenty of rabbits, pigeons, partridges, and quails. In the time of the Romans, this iſland was a place of exile, and the place to which St. John was baniſhed. A grotto in a rock, now converted into a church, is pointed out as the ſpot where that apoſtle wrote the Apocalypſe. This church belongs to a convent, the abbot of which is prince of the iſland, and pays annually 1000 crowns to the grand ſignior, beſides preſents to the captain Pacha: 16 miles SW. Samos. Long. 44. 12. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 24. N.

PATNA, a city of Hindooſtan, and capital of the country of Bahar, and reſidence of a governor. This is a very extenſive and populous city, built along the ſouth ſide of the Ganges, on an eminence. By this it is ſecured from the inundations of the river, which would otherwiſe, at particular ſeaſons, be highly prejudicial and dangerous. Having often been the ſeat of war, it is fortified in the Indian manner, with a wall and a ſmall citadel. Moſt of the ſaltpetre imported by the Eaſt-India company, is manufactured within the province of Bahar. It is a very ancient city; and, probably, its modern name may be derived from Pataliputra, or Patelpoother; which we ſuppoſe to be the ancient Palibothra. Near this city, in the year 1764, a battle was fought between the troops of Sujah Dowlah, nabob of Oude, and the Britiſh, under the command of major Monro, when the former were defeated. The loſs of the Britiſh was two officers killed, ſix or ſeven wounded, about ſixty Europeans, and 600 Seapoys. The enemy left full 7000 behind them, 130 pieces of cannon, all their tents, baggage, &c. ſome elephants, and ſome camels. Their greateſt loſs was, when they croſſed a nullah, over which they had thrown two bridges, Sujah Dowlah fled to one of his moſt diſtant cities: 250 miles NW. Calcutta. Long. 85. 21. E. Greenwich. Lat. 25. 37. N.

PATOMA, a river of Ruſſia, which runs into the Lena, Long. 134. 10. E. Ferro; Lat. 59. 53. N.

PATUXET, a river of the United States of America, which runs into the Providence River: 5 miles below the town of Providence.

PAU, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Lower Pyrennées; before the revolution, the capital of Bearn: ſituated on a river called The Gave of Pau. It was the ſeat of a parliament, a governor, a ſeneſchal, &c. and contained an univerſity, an academy of ſciences, two hoſpitals, a college, and ſeveral convents; here are manufactures of cloth, linen, &c. The hams cured here are highly eſteemed. It was the ancient reſidence of the kings of Navarre, and the birth-place of Henry IV.; the number of inhabitants is about 12,000. The environs are planted with vineyards: 12½ poſts E. Bayonne, and 21½ WSW. Toulouſe. Long. 17. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 17. N.

PAUCAR-COLLA, a juriſdiction of South America, in Buenos Ayres, and dioceſe of La Pas: the inhabitants feed a great number of ſheep, and manufacture the wool, which is coarſe. There are ſome mines of ſilver, but they are in general filled with water. Puna is the principal town.

PAUCARTAMBA, a juriſdiction of South America, in Peru, ſituated to the eaſt of Cuſco, about 24 leagues in length. It is fertile in corn and fruit.

PAVIA, a city of Italy, and capital of a duchy, on the Teſino, ſituated in a beautiful plain. The citadel was once ſtrong, but the fortifications have been neglected, the ſtreets are broad and ſtraight, with ſome good buildings, but nothing at preſent appears to announce that it was once the capital of Lombardy. It is the ſee of a biſhop, immediately dependant on the pope, and, beſides the cathedral, contains eighteen pariſh churches, and thirty-eight convents. The univerſity was founded by Charlemagne, and re-eſtabliſhed by Charles IV. Pavia was founded by the Gauls, who were driven out by the Romans, and they in their turn by the Goths, about the middle of the fifth century. In the year 1476 or 1477, the town being completely ruined, Odoacer granted the inhabitants an exemption of five years, with permiſſion to rebuild the town, which till then had borne the name of Ticinum. When rebuilt it was called Papia or Pavia, and in the year 568, being taken by the Lombards, it became the capital of their kingdom, which ended with Didier, who was made priſoner by Charlemagne, in the year 774; after that it ſuffered ſeveral calamities, between the inhabitants and the Milaneſe. It afterwards became the prey of ſeveral tyrants, before it fell under the dominion of the dukes of Milan. In the year 1525, Francis I. king of France, while he was beſieging this town, was taken priſoner by the imperialiſts. In the year 1527, the French, under the command of viſcount Lautreck, returned and ſacked this unfortunate city, ſo that it has never recovered itſelf. In the year 1733, it was taken by the allies, and with its territory followed the fortune of Milan. The Paveſe, or duchy of Pavia, is bounded on the north by the Milaneſe, on the eaſt by the Lodeſan and Piacentin, on the ſouth by the territory of Genoa, and on the weſt by the Lumellin and Tortoneſe: 17 miles S. Milan, and 72 W. Mantua. Long. 26. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 10. N.—This city at firſt ſubmitted to general Buonaparte: a conſpiracy was afterwards diſcovered, but ſoon ſubdued.

PAVIE, a town of France, in the department of the Gers: 1 league S. Auch.

PAYMAGO, a fort of Portugal, in the province of Eſtremadura, on the ſea-coaſt: 1½ league SSE. Peniche.

PAYMOGO, a town of Spain, in the province of Seville, on the frontiers of Portugal: 35 miles N. Ayamonte.

PAYTA, or St. Michel de Payta, a town of South America, in the province of Quito, and juriſdiction of Piura, founded by Francis Pizarro, in the year 1531. It is ſmall, not containing above 200 families. The houſes are only ground-floors, the walls of ſplit canes and mud, and covered with leaves. Theſe edifices, though extremely ſlight, are abundantly ſufficient for a climate where rain is conſidered as a prodigy, and is not ſeen in many years; ſo that a ſmall quantity falling here in 1728, great part of the buildings were ruined; the walls as it were melting away before it. The only houſe built of ſtone in the whole place, is that of the governor. It has a pariſh church and chapel, dedicated to Our Lady of Mercy, and ſerved by a religious of that order. The inhabitants of Payta are principally Indians and black ſlaves, or at leaſt Meſtizoes, there being but few whites. The port of Payta, though in reality little more than a bay, is eſteemed the beſt on the coaſt, and is indeed a very ſecure anchoring place. It is greatly frequented by all veſſels coming from the north, this being the only place where ſhips from Acapulco, Sonſonorate, Panama, &c. can touch and take in refreſhments in their paſſage to Callao; and the length of theſe voyages, the winds being moſt part of the year againſt them, renders it impoſſible to perform them without calling on the coaſt for a ſupply of freſh water. Payta indeed is ſituated on ſo parched a ſpot, that it does not itſelf furniſh a ſingle drop of freſh water, or any kind of green proviſions, except fiſh and a few goats. But water, maize, greens, fowls, &c. are brought from Colan, to Payta, on balzas, or floats, for the conveniency of the ſhips that touch here; and cattle are often brought from Piura. The water brought from Colan is whitiſh, and of a diſagreeable appearance, but ſaid to be very wholeſome; for the inhabitants pretend that it runs through large woods of Sarſaparilla, and is ſenſibly impregnated with the virtues of that plant. Payta is alſo the place where paſſengers from Acapulco or Panama, bound to Lima, diſembark, for it being 200 leagues from Payta to Callao, the port of Lima, and the wind generally contrary, the paſſage is very tedious and fatiguing; but by land there is a tolerably good road, parallel to the coaſt, with many towns and villages for the accommodation of travellers. The whole defence of the town conſiſts in a ſmall fort ſurrounded with a brick wall, and mounted with about eight pieces of cannon, but neither ditch nor outwork. Payta has been often taken by the Engliſh, particularly by commodore Anſon, in November, 1741. Long. 63. 20. W. Ferro. Lat. 5. 10. S.

PAZ (La), a province and archbiſhopric of South America, in the government of Buenos Ayres, full of mountains, one of which called Illimani, contains, in all human probability, immenſe riches; for a crag of it being ſome years ſince broken off by a flaſh of lightning, ſuch a quantity of gold was found among the fragments, that it was ſold for ſome time at La Paz, for eight pieces-of-eight the ounce. But the ſummit of this mountain being perpetually covered with ice and ſnow, no attempt has been made to open a mine.

PAZ (La), a city of South America, and capital of a province of the ſame name, in the government of Buenos Ayres, ſituated among the breaches of the mountains, on the ſide of a vally, through which a pretty large river flows, and about 12 leagues diſtant from the Cordillera. The ground on which it ſtands is not only unequal, but ſurrounded by mountains. When the river is ſwelled by rains, or melted ſnow from the Cordillera, its current forces along huge maſſes of rocks, with ſome grains of gold, which are found after the water has ſubſided. In the year 1730, an Indian happening to waſh his feet in the river, found a lump of gold of ſo large a ſize, that the marquis de Caſtel Fuerte gave 12,000 pieces of eight for it, and ſent it to Spain, as a preſent worthy the curioſity of his ſovereign. The city of La Paz is of a middling ſize, and the houſes well built. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and beſides the cathedral, contains four churches, an hoſpital, a college, and ſeveral convents: 60 leagues ESE. Arequipa. Long. 50. 50. W. Ferro. Lat. 17. 10. S.

PAZZANO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Calabria Ultra: 19 miles NNE. Girace.

PEDROSA, a town of Spain, in Old Caſtile: 5 miles SE. Najera.

PEEBLES, a town of Scotland, and capital of the county to which it gives name, ſituated on a ſmall river, called Peebles, which ſeparates the town into Old and New, and ſoon after joins the Tweed. It is a royal burgh, and is ſuppoſed to owe its name to the pebbles with which the environs abound. The old town, which was formerly of conſiderable extent, was ſeveral times plundered and burnt by the Engliſh; ſo that nothing was left undeſtroyed but the churches, the manſe, and the croſs, which being held ſacred, were commonly ſpared. The principal inhabitants were induced to build a new town on the eaſt ſide of that water, as being a ſituation more eaſily fortified, and to ſurround it with ſtrong walls and gates, which continued till the two kingdoms were united. The high church in the old town was demoliſhed, and the croſs church, as being nearer to the new town, was converted into the parochial one, and employed in the offices of reformed religion, till January, 1784, when the new church having been built within the town, was opened for religious worſhip. Though Peebles cannot boaſt of much trade, yet it has ſome manufacture of carpets and ſerges, and a weekly market or corn and cattle. In the monaſtery at this place, Alexander III. and other Scottiſh kings, are ſaid frequently to have reſided. Part of this ancient fabric ſerved as a place of worſhip, before the preſent pariſh church was built. In the vicinity of the town, there are ſeveral genteel houſes, and the fields are well cultivated. On a projecting rock, near the Tweed, ſtands Neidpath caſtle, an ancient fortreſs: 40 miles WSW. Berwick, and 18 S. Edinburgh.

PEEBLESHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north by Edinburghſhire, on the eaſt by Edinburghſhire and Selkirkſhire, on the ſouth by Dumfriesſhire, and on the weſt by Lanerkſhire: 25 miles from north to ſouth, and from 10 to 18 from eaſt to weſt. The country in general riſes in hills, many of which are covered with verdure to their very ſummits, and between them are pleaſant fertile vallies, well watered and interſperſed with gentlemen's ſeats. The principal grain is oats and barley, with few plantations, except round particular houſes. This country is ſometimes called Tweedale, from the river Tweed, which croſſes a conſiderable part. Peebles is the capital.

PEEK'S KILL, a place of the United States of America, in New York, where ſome magazines belonging to the Americans were deſtroyed by the Britiſh, in the year 1777: 40 miles N. New York.

PEEL, or Peel Town, a town in the Iſle of Man, ſituated on the weſt coaſt, anciently called Holm Town, from a ſmall iſland, cloſe by it, in which ſtands the cathedral, dedicated to St. German, the firſt biſhop of this iſle. This little iſle, naturally very ſtrong, was made much more ſo by art, Thomas earl of Derby encompaſſing it with a wall, towers, and other fortifications, and making it in thoſe days impregnable. At preſent a ſmall garriſon is kept there; and it is the priſon for all offenders againſt the eccleſiaſtical laws, whether for inceſt, adultery, &c. or diſobedience; and it is called St. German's Priſon. It has no harbour, but a road with from 7 to 10 fathom water. Long. 4. 40. W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 13. N.

PEENE, a river of Germany, which runs into the Baltic, a little to the weſt of the iſland of Uſedom. This river, for a conſiderable part of its courſe, ſeparates Swediſh Pomerania from Pruſſian Pomerania. Long. 31. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 54. 10. N.

PEENEMUNDE SCHANZ, a town and fort of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in the iſland of Uſedom, which it commands entirely, as it does alſo the entrance and mouth of the Peene, near which it ſtands. The commanding-officer of this iſland is a major, and in time of peace, its garriſon conſiſts only of one company. In the year 1758, its harbour was deſtroyed by the Pruſſians. In 1715, the Pruſſians made themſelves maſters of it, though not without great loſs. In 1757, it was taken by the Swedes; in 1758, recovered by the Pruſſians, but the very ſame year the Swedes again got poſſeſſion of it: 6 miles N. Wolgaſt. Long. 31. 27. E. Ferro. Lat. 54. 8. N.

PEGNON DE VELEZ, a fortreſs of Africa, ſituated on the north coaſt of Morocco, on the coaſt of the Mediterranean, belonging to Spain. It was built in the year 1508, by Don Pedro of Navarre. In the year 1522, it was taken by the Moors, and retaken by the Spaniards in the year 1664: 40 miles E. Gomera, and 68 W. Melilla.

PEGONGMECO, a town of Aſia, in the kingdom of Burmah: 66 miles SW. Ava, and 288 ENE. Aracan.

PEGU, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by Aracan and Ava, on the eaſt and ſouth by Siam and the ſea, and on the weſt by part of Aracan, and the Bay of Bengal. Pegu ſeems to be a level country, without any conſiderable mountains, excepting ſome which ſurround it, and ſerve for a frontier towards the land, but is liable to be invaded not only by ſea, but alſo by land, by means of the rivers which make their paſſage through thoſe mountains. Among theſe two are moſt remarkable; the firſt, the river of Pegu; the ſecond, the river of Aia, ſo called from thoſe capitals, which are ſituate on their banks. The air of Pegu is very healthy; the ſoil very rich and fertile in corn, fruit, and roots; it likewiſe produces good timber of ſeveral kinds. The country abounds with elephants, buffaloes, goats, hogs, and other animals; here is abundance of wild game, and deer in great plenty. There are in Pegu, mines not only of iron, tin, and ganſa, or lead, which paſſes for money, but alſo of rubies, diamonds, and ſapphires. The rubies are the beſt in the world; but the diamonds are ſmall. The inhabitants of Pegu are a mixture of natives, whom ſome authors term Peguers, and Barmas, or Bramas, who conquered them, and are at preſent maſters of the country; they are diſtinguiſhed not only by their features, but their dreſs. Some give the people of Pegu a very good character, as being of a mild, humane, and very charitable diſpoſition; while others repreſent them to be the moſt corrupt in their manners of all the Indian nations. The religion of Pegu is the ſame, in general, with that which prevails over the reſt of India and Thibet. They hold the exiſtence of one ſupreme God, the Creator of all things, of whom they make no image; and the worſhip of him is monopolized by the prieſts, the people not being thought worthy of paying their homage to ſo exalted a Being. For this reaſon, other inferior and created gods are ſet apart for them. The Peguers hold the doctrine of the metempſychoſis, or tranſmigration of the human ſoul, which, after paſſing through the bodies of various animals, ſhall attain to the perfections and felicity of their gods. The prieſts of Pegu, called talepoy, obſerve celibacy, and eat but once a day. They wear a long frock, girt with a leathern thong, four inches broad, at which hangs a bag for receiving alms, for they have no ſtipends; and in caſe the few acres, which every one who builds a temple beſtows for their maintenance, be not ſufficient, they ſend ſome novices abroad to beg alms. Pegu, in a larger ſenſe, as augmented by the conqueſt of its Barmah kings, compriſed the countries of Aracan, Ava, Laos, and Siam, and extended from Hindooſtan to China. In the beginning of the 17th century, Pegu was conquered by the king of Ava, or Barmah, and the kingdoms united.

PEGU, a city of Aſia, and formerly capital of a kingdom of the ſame name, near the river Pegu. This city, in the year 1600, was one of the moſt ſplendid, large, and populous in all Aſia. According to ſome Europeans who ſaw this city in its greateſt ſplendour, it was very ſpacious, fair, and ſtrong, ſurrounded with ſtone walls, and very wide ditches. It was divided into two cities, the old and new; in the old lived the merchants and ſtrangers, and, as the houſes were only built with wood, or bambû canes, covered with tiles, each had a warehouſe of brick arched, to ſecure the goods from fires, which were very frequent there. The new city, inhabited by the king, the nobility, and people of faſhion, was very extenſive and populous; its figure ſquare, and in each ſide of the wall were five gates of ſtone, with many gilded towers along it for poſting centries; it was encompaſſed with broad ditches, in which were bred crocodiles, to deter people from wading over them. The ſtreets were regular, running in a line from gate to gate, and ſo wide, that twelve men might go abreaſt. Each houſe had a palm-tree growing at the door, which formed a ſhade for paſſengers. The king's palace ſtood in the midſt of this new city, built like a fortreſs with walls and ditches. The houſes and apartments within were of wood, all over gilded, and adorned with battlements, covered with plates of gold: within the gate was a ſpacious court, with lodgings on the ſides for the king's choiceſt elephants, amongſt which were four of a white colour. That prince would not ſuffer any other to have white elephants; it was on this account only that he made war on the king of Siam, in 1567, from whom he took the famous white elephant; and afterwards aſſumed the title of king of the white elephant. Near the palace was a large court, ſurrounded with ſtone walls; and its two gates were always open, ſeemingly regardleſs of the immenſe treaſure within. The new city, with the palace and all its ornaments, was finiſhed about the year 1567. In the year 1596, the king of Siam beſieged the king of Pegu in his capital for three months; but, for this time, he was relieved by the aſſiſtance of a body of Turks, in conjunction with ſome Portugueſe; however, moſt of thoſe whom war ſpared, famine deſtroyed; for, out of 150,000 men, numbered in the city before the ſiege, only 30,000 were left, with 3000 cannon, a thouſand of them braſs, for its defence. The kings of Aracan and Tangu, taking advantage of this diſtreſſed condition of Pegu, marched to beſiege it again; and the king being at length obliged to ſubmit for want of proviſions, ſome time in the year 1592, yielded himſelf and the city into the hands of the king of Tangu, whoſe wife, though ſiſter to the unfortunate prince, cauſed him and his family to be put to death. From that time Pegu ceaſed to be the royal ſeat, and fell to decay; ſo that, although ſix or ſeven leagues in compaſs, not one twentieth part of it is now inhabited, and that only by the lower claſs of people; however, it is ſtill the ſeat of the viceroy, who governs for the king, reſiding now at Ava. Long. 96. 42. PEKING, a city of China, and capital of the empire, ſituated in very fertile plain, twenty leagues diſtant from the great wall; this nam which ſignifies the Northern Court, is given it to diſtinguiſh it from Na king, or the Southern Court. The emperor formerly reſided in the latte but the Tartars, a reſtleſs and warlike people, obliged the prince to remo his court to the northern provinces, that he might more effectually re the incurſions of thoſe barbarians, by oppoſing to them the numero militia that he generally keeps around his perſon. This capital forms exact ſquare, and is divided into two cities; the firſt is inhabited Chineſe; the ſecond by Tartars. Theſe two cities, without includi the ſuburbs, are ſix leagues in circumference, according to the moſt acc rate meaſurement made by the expreſs order of the emperor. The wa of the Tartar city are very lofty, and ſo thick, that twelve horſemen mig eaſily ride abreaſt upon them; with ſpacious towers at intervals, a bo ſhot diſtant from one another, and large enough to contain bodies of r ſerve in caſe of neceſſity. The city has nine gates, which are lofty, an well arched; over them are large pavilion-roofed towers, divided into ni ſtories, each having ſeveral apertures or port-holes; the lower ſtory form a large hall, for the uſe of the ſoldiers and officers who quit guard, a thoſe appointed to relieve them. Before each gate a ſpace is left of mo than 360 feet; this is a kind of place of arms, incloſed by a ſemicircul wall, equal in height and thickneſs to that ſurrounding the city. T great road, which ends here, is commanded by a pavilion-roofed tow like the firſt, in ſuch manner that, as the cannon of the former can batt the houſes of the city, thoſe of the latter can ſweep the adjacent countr The ſtreets of Peking are ſtraight, about 120 feet wide, a full league length, and bordered with ſhops. It is aſtoniſhing to ſee the imme concourſe of people that continually fills them, and the confuſion cauſ by the prodigious number of horſes, camels, mules, and carriages, whi croſs or meet each other. Beſides this inconvenience, one is every no and then ſtopped by crowds, who ſtand liſtening of fortune-tellers, jug glers, ballad-ſingers, and a thouſand other mountebanks and buffoon who read and relate ſtories calculated to promote mirth and laughter, diſtribute medicines, the wonderful effects of which they explain with the eloquence peculiar to them. People of diſtinction oblige all their de pendants to follow them. A mandarin of the firſt rank is always accom panied in his walks by his whole tribunal, and to augment his equipag each of the inferior mandarins in his ſuite is generally attended by ſever domeſtics. The nobility of the court, and princes of the blood, neve appear in public without being ſurrounded by a large body of cavalry and, as their preſence is required at the palace every day, their train alo would be ſufficient to create confuſion in the city. It is very ſingula that in all this prodigious concourſe, no women are ever ſeen: hence we ma judge how great the population of China muſt be, ſince the number of femal in this country, as well as every where elſe, is ſuperior to that of the oth ſex. As there is a continual influx of the riches and merchandize of th whole empire into this city, the number of ſtrangers that reſort hither immenſe; they are carried in chairs, or ride on horſeback; the latter more common; but they are always attended by a guide, acquainted wi the ſtreets, and who knows the houſes of the nobility, and principal peo ple of the city. They are alſo provided with a book, containing an accoun of the different quarters, ſquares, remarkable places, and of the reſiden of thoſe in public offices. In ſummer there are to be ſeen ſmall temporar ſhops, where people are ſerved with water, cooled by means of ice; an one finds every where eating-houſes, with refreſhments of tea and fruit Each kind of proviſion has a certain day and place appointed for its bein expoſed to ſale. The governor of Peking, who is a Mantchew Tartar, ſtyled governor of the nine gates; his juriſdiction extends not only ov the ſoldiers, but alſo over the people in every thing that concerns the polic No police can be more active. It is rare, in a number of years, to hear houſes being robbed, or people aſſaſſinated; all the principal ſtreets hav guard-rooms, and ſoldiers patrol night and day, each having a ſabre hangin from his girdle, and a whip in his hand, to correct, without diſtinctio thoſe who excite quarrels or cauſe diſorder. The lanes are guarded in th ſame manner, and have latticed gates, which do not prevent thoſe fro being ſeen who walk in them; they are always kept ſhut during the nigh and ſeldom opened even to thoſe who are known: if they are, the perſo to whom this indulgence is granted muſt carry a lanthorn, and give ſufficie reaſon for his going out. The emperor's palace ſtands in the middle the Tartar city. It preſents a prodigious aſſemblage of vaſt building extenſive courts, and magnificent gardens, and is ſhut up on all ſides b a double wall, the intervening ſpace being occupied by houſes belonging the officers of the court, eunuchs, and by different tribunals. To ſome theſe is aſſigned the care of providing neceſſaries for the uſe of the emperor; others are for determining diſputes, and puniſhing faults committed by the domeſtics of the imperial family. The exterior circumference of this immenſe palace is reckoned a league and a half. Although the Chineſe architecture has no reſemblance to that of Europe, the imperial palace of Peking does not fail to ſtrike beholders by its extent, grandeur, and the regular diſpoſition of its apartments. The royal hall, called Tai-hotien, or the Hall of the Grand Union, is built upon a terrace, about eighteen feet in height, incruſted with white marble, and ornamented with baluſtrades of excellent workmanſhip. Before this hall, all the mandarins range themſelves, when they go, on certain days, to renew their homage, and perform thoſe ceremonies that are appointed by the laws of the empire. This hall is almoſt ſquare, and about 130 feet in length. The cieling is carved, varniſhed green, and loaded with gilt dragoons, covered with coarſe carpets, after the Turkiſh manner; but the walls have no kind of ornament, neither tapeſtry, luſtres, nor paintings. The throne, which is in the middle of the hall, conſiſts of a pretty high alcove, exceedingly neat. It has no inſcription but the character Ching, which ſignifies holy, perfect, excellent. Peking is ſuppoſed to contain two millions of inhabitants. Long. 133. 54. E. Ferro. Lat. 39. 55. N.

PELEW ISLANDS, or Palaos, a cluſter of iſlands in the weſtern part of the Pacific Ocean, ſituated between the Philippine Iſlands, and the Caroline Iſlands. They are about eighteen in number; the names of ſome of the principal are Oroolong, Emungs, Emillegue, Artingal, Coccraa, and Pelelew. In the year 1783, captain Wilſon, commander of the Antelope packet, in the company of the Eaſt India Company, was wrecked on this coaſt. Theſe iſlands were, probably, firſt noticed by ſome of the Spaniards of the Philippines, and by them named the Palos Iſlands, from the tall palm-trees which grow there in great abundance, having, at a diſtance, the appearance of maſts of ſhips. That this was the origin of their name, is rendered ſtill more probable, as the Spaniards gave the ſame appellation to all the numerous iſlands of the Archipelago, the far greater part of which are now known by the name of the New Carolines. The inhabitants had been repreſented as inhuman and ſavage, and fed on human fleſh: Captain Wilſon, on the contrary, found the inhabitants hoſpitable, friendly, and humane. Theſe iſlands are long, but narrow; of a moderate height; well covered with wood, at leaſt ſuch of the iſlands as Captain Wilſon's people had an opportunity of ſeeing. They are circled on the weſt ſide by a reef of coral, of which no end could be ſeen from any eminences they were on; this reef, in ſome places, extends five or ſix leagues from the ſhore, and in no parts that were viſited leſs than two or three. At Pelew, the king was the firſt perſon in the government; he appeared to be conſidered as the father of his people, and, though diveſted of all external decorations of royalty, had every mark of diſtinctions paid to his perſon. His rupacks, or chiefs, approached him with the greateſt reſpect; and his common ſubjects, whenever they paſſed near him, or had occaſion to addreſs him, put their hands behind them, and crouched towards the ground; even if they were paſſing any houſe, or place, where the king was ſuppoſed to be, they humiliated themſelves in the ſame manner, till they got beyond his probable preſence, when they reſumed their uſual way of walking. This perſonage, however great he was held at Pelew, was not underſtood to poſſeſs a ſovereignty over all the iſlands which came within their knowledge. The next in power was the king's brother, officially general of all his forces. The king was always attended by a particular chief, or rupack, who did not appear to poſſeſs any hereditary office, but only a delegated authority. He was always near the king's perſon, and the chief who was firſt conſulted: but whether this office was religious or civil, or both, Captain Wilſon could not learn with any certainty. He was not conſidered as a warrior, nor ever bore arms: and had only one wife, whereas the other rupacks had two. The Engliſh were never invited to his houſe, or introduced into it, although they were conducted to thoſe of almoſt all the other chiefs. Every part of the iſland, called Corooraa, to which Pelew appeared to be the capital, ſeemed to bear the marks of induſtry and good cultivation. All the iſlands which the Engliſh ſaw, were well covered with trees of various kinds and ſizes, ſome of them being very large, as may eaſily be conceived by their canoes made out of trunks, which, when of the largeſt dimenſions, were capable of carrying twenty-eight or thirty men. They had a great variety of timber trees, among which was noticed the ebony, and a tree that, being pierced or wounded by a gimblet, there ran from it a thick white liquid, of the conſiſtence of cream; they had alſo a ſpecies of the manchineel tree; but the moſt ſingular tree noticed at Pelew, was one in ſize, and its manner of branching, not unlike our cherry tree, but in its leaves reſembling the myrtle; its peculiarity was, that it had no bark, having only an outward coat of about the thickneſs of a card, darker than the inſide, though equally cloſe in texture; the colour of the interior part being nearly that of mahogany, and ſo extremely hard, that few of the tools which the Engliſh had could work it, the wood breaking their edges almoſt every moment. They had, alſo, the cabbage-tree, and a tree whoſe fruit nearly reſembled an almond; the carambola, and the wild bread fruit, called, by the natives, riamall: yams and cocoa nuts being the chief article of ſuſtenance, were attended to with the utmoſt care. The beetle-nut they had in abundance, and made great uſe of it; they poſſeſſed plantains and bananas, Seville oranges and lemons. This country produced ſome ſugar-cane, and great abundance of the bamboo; likewiſe the turmeric, which the natives uſed as a dye, and with which the women ſtained their ſkins. None of the iſlands the Engliſh viſited had any kind of grain; nor any quadruped whatever, except ſome browniſh grey rats which ran wild in the woods, and three or four meagre cats, which were ſeen in ſome houſes at Pelew, probably brought on ſome drift, or part of a canoe of other iſlands wrecked on the reef. As to birds, they had plenty of common cocks and hens, which, though they were not domeſticated, but ran about the woods, yet loved to get near their houſes and plantations; and what will appear ſingular (conſidering the little variety of food) they had never made any uſe of them till the Engliſh taught the natives to eat them. Several birds were ſeen flying about, whoſe plumage appeared to be extremely beautiful, but they probably might be of the ſame kinds as are found in different countries between the tropics. The iſlands had ſeveral ſmall birds, whoſe notes were very melodious, particularly one which uſed to ſing every morning and evening, and had a pipe ſweet as a flagelet: they had a variety of fiſh. The iſlands of Pelew, when viewed from the ſea, exhibit high rugged land, well covered with wood; the interior part was, in many places, mountainous, but the vallies were extenſive and beautiful, ſpreading before the eye many delicious proſpects. The ſoil was, in general, rich; they had a great deal of graſs, which having no cattle whatever to eat down, grew high, and was ſcorched and burnt up by the heat of the ſun. Our people ſaw no river at Pelew; their ſupplies of freſh water being from ſmall ſtreams and ponds, of which there were many. They had no ſalt, nor did they make uſe of ſauce, or ſeaſoning, in any thing they ate. Their drink was as ſimple as their diet: at their meals, the milk of the cocoa-nut was their uſual beverage. They had no method, that was obſerved, of meaſuring time, but by the height of the ſun. Their ſeaſons were divided into the wet and dry, as in other tropical countries. They had ſome knowledge of the ſtars, having names for ſeveral of them, which they pointed out to our people. Every part of the Pelew iſlands that the Engliſh viſited, appeared populous, though to what extent of population they could never aſcertain. Their houſes were raiſed about three feet from the ground, placed on large ſtones, which appeared as if cut from the quarry, being thick and oblong. Their fiſhing-hooks were of tortoiſe-ſhell; their twines, their cords, and all their fiſhing-nets, were well manufactured, and made from the huſks of the cocoa-nut. The mats on which they ſlept, and threw over them when at reſt, were formed of the plantain-leaf. At their meals they generally uſed a plantain-leaf inſtead of a plate; the ſhell of the cocoa-nut ſerving as a cup to drink out of, which they ſometimes poliſhed very nicely. They made, alſo, veſſels of a kind of earthenware of a reddiſh-brown colour, and moſtly of an oval ſhape: in theſe they heated their water, and boiled their fiſh, yams, &c. The principal weapons uſed in their battles were ſpears; they were commonly about twelve feet long, formed of the bamboo, with the pointed end made of ſome wood, exceedingly hard; they were barbed tranſverſely, ſo that, having once entered the body, it was difficult to draw them out without lacerating the fleſh, and widening, to a great degree, the wound. Another war weapon was the dart and fling; the fling was a piece of wood about two feet in length, with a notch made in it, wherein the head of the dart was fixed. The dart was of bamboo, pointed with an extreme hard and heavy kind of wood, like the ſpear, which they compreſſed with their hand, till the elaſticity of the bamboo had formed ſuch a curve as experience told them would reach the object aimed at; then letting it ſlip from the notch, it flew forth, and fell by its gravitation with the point downward, ſo as to effect the purpoſe of being deſtructive if it fell upon the enemy. The natives of theſe iſlands are a ſtout well-made people, rather above the middling ſtature; their complexions are of a far deeper colour than what is underſtood by the Indian copper, but not black; the hair is long and flowing, rather diſpoſed to curl, which they moſtly form into one large looſe curl round their heads; ſome of the women, who have remarkably long hair, let it hang looſe down their backs. The men were entirely naked; the women wore only two little aprons, or rather thick fringes, one before and one behind, about ten inches deep, and ſeven wide; theſe were made of the huſks of the cocoa-nut, ſtripped into narrow ſlips, which they dyed with different ſhades of yellow. Both men and women were tatooed, or, as they call it, melgothed; this operation took place, as our people conceived, at a certain period of youth, they having never ſeen any children of either ſex marked by it. The men had their left ear bored, and the women both; a few of the firſt wore beads in the perforated ear, the latter either put ſome leaf through, or an ear-ring of tortoiſe-ſhell inlaid. The cartilage between the noſtrils was alſo bored, in both ſexes, through which they frequently put a little ſprig, or bloſſom, of ſome plant, or ſhrub, that accidentally caught their fancy. Both ſexes were very expert at ſwimming, and appeared to be as perfectly at eaſe in water as on land. The men were admirable divers; if they ſaw any thing at the bottom of the ſea which attracted their notice, they would jump overboard inſtantly and bring it up. Their marriages were, probably, no more than a civil contract, but, at the ſame time, that kind of contract which was regarded as inviolable. They allowed a plurality of wives; but, in general, had not more than two; the king had five, though not living together. They do not appear to be, in any degree, jealous of them, permitting them to partake of all their diverſions. As to their religion, during their continuance with the natives of Pelew, the Engliſh never ſaw any particular ceremonies, or obſerved any thing that had the appearance of public worſhip. The king of Pelew entertained ſo great an eſteem for captain Wilſon, that he entruſted his ſecond ſon, prince Lee Boo, to his care, to accompany him to England. He was of a moſt amiable diſpoſition, deſirous of information, and of capacity to receive it; this young prince died of the ſmall pox at captain Wilſon's houſe in London, in the year 1784, at about twenty years of age. Long. between 130. and 136. PEMEROKESHIRE, the moſt weſtern county of South Wa bounded on the north-weſt by Cardigan Bay, on the north-eaſt by t county of Cardigan, on the eaſt by the county of Caermarthen, on t ſouth by the Briſtol Channel, and on the weſt by the Iriſh Sea. Its exte from north to ſouth, about 35 miles, and from eaſt to weſt 29, comp hending about 335,600 acres. It is divided into ſeven hundreds, wh contain ſeven towns. The ſurface is, for the moſt part, compoſed of ſwel or eaſy ſlopes, but not mountainous, except a ridge of hills, which ru from the coaſt, near Fiſhgard, to the borders of Caermarthenſhire; th hills are called the mountains, and the people diſtinguiſh the country w reference to the hills; the north ſide being called above the mountains, a the ſouth ſide below the mountains. The county is well watered ſprings riſing in the ſlopes, and biſecting the ſwells, ſo as to give a conv nient ſupply to adjacent lands in general; but ſome parts of the coaſt in want of water in the ſummer ſeaſon, particularly where lime ſtone found at a moderate depth. The climate is temperate: it rarely happ that froſt continues with ſeverity for any conſiderable time; nor does ſn lie long upon the ground, but generally diſſolves the ſecond or third d after its fall. The prevailing ſtate of the air is moiſt; and there is, p bably, more rain than in any part of the kingdom, owing to the inſu ſituation, and the high mountains of Caermarthenſhire and Breconſhi lying in the eaſtward, which ſtop the current of the clouds brought by weſterly winds from the Atlantic Ocean, and occaſion thereby torre of rain to deſcend in Pembrokeſhire whenever thoſe winds prev Woods are rather ſcarce; particularly towards the weſtern co The interior part of the country is better wooded; the growth is, for moſt part, ſlow; the oak is, however, remarkably full of heart. T commerce of this county is very trifling, and cannot be ſaid to have a influence on its agriculture, unleſs we allow the exportation of corn w it is cheap, and the importation when it is dear, to be commerce. T manufactures of the county conſiſt of a cotton-mill, near Haverfordw which employs about 150 people, a forge at Blackpool, and a ſet of i and tin works on the Tivy. An attempt was made, a few years ago, eſtabliſh a linen-manufacture in Pembrokeſhire, by importing a nu ber of Iriſh from Monaghan; and a like attempt was made to e bliſh a Newfoundland fiſhery from Milfordhaven, neither of wh ſucceeded. A conſiderable eſtabliſhment is now in progreſs at the town of Milford. A company of quakers are arrived there from N tucket, in America, for the purpoſe of eſtabliſhing a whale-fiſhery to ſouthern hemiſphere. The towns of this county are Pembroke, Ha ford-weſt, Milford, Newport, Fiſhguard, Narbeth, and Tenby: the firſt, and the county, each ſend one member to the Britiſh parliament.

PENNSYLVANIA, one of the United States of America, bounded on the north by New York and Lake Erie, on the eaſt by New York and New Jerſey, on the ſouth by Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia, and on the weſt by part of Virginia and territory of the ſtates not ſettled; 250 miles in length, from eaſt to weſt, and 140 in breadth, from north to ſouth. This country was granted to the famous William Penn, ſon of ſir William Penn, admiral of the Engliſh fleet, in the time of Oliver Cromwell and Charles II. Sir William, as ſome reward for his ſervices, and in conſideration of ſundry debts due to him from the crown, was promiſed a grant of this country from king Charles II. but died before he obtained it. His ſon did not for ſome time apply himſelf ſtrenuouſly to ſolicit the grant promiſed to his father; but at length finding his friends, the Quakers, were haraſſed in every part of England by ſpiritual courts, he renewed his application to the court, and having obtained his grant, went into America, and purchaſed the ſoil at a very low rate of the Indians, its original poſſeſſors. By this cheap act of juſtice at the beginning, he rendered all his future dealings the more eaſy, the Indians having conceived very favourable opinions both of him and his deſigns. Having thus ſucceeded in the firſt part of his plan, he proceeded to the other, namely, to people the country he had thus obtained. And this was greatly facilitated by the uneaſineſs of the Engliſh Quakers; who, from their high opinion of the man, determined to follow him over the vaſt Atlantic Ocean, to a country uncultivated, and a climate ſtrange and unknown. Nor was he himſelf wanting in any thing that had a tendency to encourage his followers; he expended large ſums in tranſporting and ſupplying them with all neceſſaries; and not aiming at a ſudden fortune, by ſelling his lands at a very eaſy purchaſe. By this means, and the noble charter of privileges he gave the ſettlers, the country was ſoon changed from a wilderneſs to a garden, and is now one of the moſt flouriſhing countries in the New World; and ſtill called after his own name. The climate of Pennſylvania is very agreeable, and the air ſweet and clear. The fall, or autumn, begins about the 20th of October, and laſts till the beginning of December, when the winter ſets in, which continues till March. Froſty weather, and extreme cold ſeaſons, are frequently known here; ſo that the river Delaware, though very broad, is oftentimes froze over; but, at the ſame time, the weather is dry and healthy. The ſpring laſts from March to June, but the weather is then more inconſtant than in the other ſeaſons.

The heats are very great in the months of July, Auguſt, and September, but mitigated ſo much by cool breezes, that they are very tolerable. The wind is at ſouth-weſt during great part of the ſummer, but generally at north and north-weſt in ſpring, fall, and winter: which, blowing over the frozen lakes and ſnowy mountains of Canada, is the true cauſe of the coldneſs of the weather in the winter ſeaſon. The ſoil is in ſome places a yellow or black ſand; in ſome a loamy gravel; and in others a fat mould, like the vales in England, eſpecially near the inland brooks and rivers. The earth is fruitful, fat, and eaſy to be cleared, the roots of the trees being but a ſmall diſtance below the ſurface of the ground. It is well watered with rivers, and produces every thing which can render life agreeable in the utmoſt plenty. In ſhort, there is no part of America in a more flouriſhing condition than Pennſylvania; nay, in ſome years, more people have tranſported themſelves into this province than in all the others. In the grand convention which was held in Philadelphia, in the ſummer, 1787, the inhabitants in Pennſylvania were reckoned at 360,000. They are now much more numerous. The inhabitants of Pennſylvania conſiſt of emigrants from England, Ireland, Germany, and Scotland. The Friends and Epiſcopalians are chiefly of Engliſh extraction, and compoſe about one-third of the inhabitants. They live principally in the city of Philadelphia, and in the counties of Cheſter, Philadelphia, Bucks, and Montgomery. The Iriſh are moſtly Preſbyterians. Their anceſtors came from the north of Ireland, which was originally ſettled from Scotland; hence they have ſometimes been called Scotch-Iriſh, to denote their double deſcent. But they are commonly and more properly called Iriſh, or the deſcendants of people from the north of Ireland. They inhabit the weſtern and frontier counties, and are numerous. The Germans compoſe one-quarter at leaſt, if not a third, of the inhabitants of Pennſylvania. They inhabit the north parts of the city of Philadelphia, and the counties of Philadelphia, Montgomery, Bucks, Dauphin, Lancaſter, York, and Northampton; moſtly in the four laſt. They conſiſt of Lutherans (who are the moſt numerous ſect) Calviniſts, Moravians, Mennoniſts, Tunkers (corruptly called Dunkers) and Swingfelters, who are a ſpecies of Quakers. Theſe are all diſtinguiſhed for their temperance, induſtry, and economy. The Germans have uſually fifteen of ſixty-nine members in the aſſembly; and ſome of them have riſen to the firſt honours in the ſtate, and now fill a number of the higher offices. Yet the lower claſs are very ignorant and ſuperſtitious. It is not uncommon to ſee them going to market with a little bag of ſalt tied to their horſes manes, for the purpoſe, they ſay, of keeping off witches. The baptiſts (except the Mennoniſt and Tunker baptiſts, who are Germans) are chiefly the deſcendants of emigrants from Wales, and are not numerous. A proportionate aſſemblage of the national prejudices, the manners, cuſtoms, religions, and political ſentiments of all theſe, will form the Pennſylvanian character. As the leading traits in this character, thus conſtituted, we may venture to mention induſtry, frugality, bordering in ſome inſtances on parſimony, enterprize, a taſte and ability for improvements in mechanics, in manufactures, in agriculture, in commerce, and in the liberal ſciences; temperance, plainneſs, and ſimplicity in dreſs and manners; pride and humility in their extremes; inoffenſiveneſs and intrigue; in regard to religion, variety and harmony; liberality and, its oppoſites, ſuperſtition and bigotry; and in politics an unhappy jargon. Such appear to be the diſtinguiſhing traits in the collective Pennſylvanian character. The literary and other uſeful ſocieties, are more numerous and flouriſhing, in Pennſylvania, than in any of the Thirteen States. Philadelphia is the capital, not only of this, but of the United States.

PEREKOP, a fortreſs of Ruſſia, in the province of Tauris, on the iſthmus which joins the peninſula to the continent, and which has always been reckoned the key to the whole country. Its name is Sclavonian, and ſignifies a cut made through a place, being derived from the ditch dug here, in very remote ages, acroſs the neck of land at the entrance of the Crimea, for the ſecurity of the peninſula ; and which has been, from time to time, repaired, and, at length, fortified. On this account, the Greeks call it Taphros, or Taphiæ, and the Turks and Tartars, Or, which have pretty much the ſame ſignification with Perekop. The houſes here are but mean. In the years 1638 and 1736, the Ruſſians took it ; at the laſt of which times, the whole Turkiſh garriſon, conſiſting of 2554 men, were made priſoners of war. Though the Ruſſians demoliſhed the place, the Tartars took the pains to rebuild it. In the year 1771, it was again taken by the Ruſſians, when the garriſon ſurrendered priſoners of war. PERSIA, a country of Aſia, than which, perhaps, none has been more various in its power and extent: even its preſent boundaries are, in ſome degree, unknown, eſpecially towards Ruſſia, Tartary, and India. In the general outline, it is bounded on the north by Ruſſia, the Caſpian Sea, and the country of the independent Tartars; on the eaſt by the Mogul empire, from which a ridge of mountains and the river Indus divide it; on the ſouth it has the Arabian Sea and the Perſian Gulf; and on the weſt it has Georgia, Curdiſtan, Armenia, and Arabia. Its greateſt extent, from ſouth to north is about 1140 Engliſh miles, and its greateſt extent from eaſt to weſt is about 1280 miles, though in many parts it is much narrower, eſpecially towards the north, where, on the weſt, it contains but a narrow track of land between Turkey and the Caſpian Sea; and, on the eaſt, it is alſo pent up between the ſame ſea and the country of the Tartars. The temperature of the air is various, according to the different provinces. In the province of Adirbeitzan, the capital of which is Tauris, to the ſouth of Armenia, the air is very cold, and yet very healthy; but in Taberiſtan, or Mezanderan, to the ſouth of the Caſpian Sea, is very unwholeſome. The country here is marſhy, and abounds with an infinite number of inſects, which dying when the marſhes are dried up in ſummer, infect the air with poiſonous exhalations; there are beſides ſo many fetid waters in this province, that, by overflowing part of the country, they occaſion the inhabitants to have an earthy complexion. Shah Abbas tranſported 20,000 Armenian families into Taberiſtan, in order to people and cultivate it; but few of them withſtood the inſalubrity of the country, which is, notwithſtanding, very fruitful. The air is not better in the province of Ghilan, which lies to the north-weſt of Mezanderan, and, indeed, is ſo bad in both, that it is cuſtomary to aſk, when any perſon is appointed governor of either, whether he is guilty of robbery or murder, that he ſhould be ſent thither? The province of Perſian Irac, of which Iſpahan is the capital, and which lies about the middle of the kingdom, enjoys ſix months hot, and ſix months cold weather, though lying between the 31ſt and 36th degrees of north latitude. It ſnows there four or five times in the ſeaſon, and ſometimes in ſuch quantities, that it is impoſſible to find the roads. At about a league's diſtance from Iſpahan, there is a ſtone three or four feet high; and, when the ſnow happens to cover the ground to that height, it is a ſign of a plentiful year. The firſt peaſant that carries the news of it to court, receives a reward of 100 tomans, about 230l. ſterling. It rains here very ſeldom, except in April, when the ſhowers are ſometimes pretty heavy. In the ſouthern provinces, eſpecially along the ſea coaſt, the air is ſo exceſſively hot and ſultry, that it is very dangerous, and even mortal to Europeans, particularly to ſuch as are not temperate in eating and drinking: generally ſpeaking, the ſoil in Perſia cannot be much commended; for, though ſome parts are fruitful, others are perfectly barren, being mountainous and ſandy. By reaſon of the ſcarcity of rivers, there is only rain and diſſolved ſnow for watering the land; and theſe, falling from the mountains in ſmall brooks and rivulets, render the vallies fertile. Here their corn ripens exceedingly ſoon, and, in ſome parts, they have a threefold crop in a year. At Iſpahan they have almoſt all kinds of the choiceſt European fruits, but fairer and better; and, by the dryneſs of the air, they keep a whole year. The melons are excellent, and not dangerous, as in Europe; their apricots delicious; and their peaches large and good. They have nine or ten ſorts of very good grapes, which yield good wine, chiefly white, for th red wines do not keep ſo well, except that of Schiras. They have fe trees but what grow in their gardens, and of theſe the palm-tree is th moſt carefully cultivated. Perſia produces all ſorts of culinary herbs plants, roots, and pulſe; it has ſtore of cattle, eſpecially oxen; an abounds particularly with poultry and game. The Perſian breed is generally very thin, white, and good. Their horſes are the fineſt in all th eaſt; they are higher than the Engliſh ſaddle-horſes, ſtraight before, ſmall head, legs wonderfully ſlender and finely proportioned, gentl good travellers, very light and ſprightly, and doing good ſervice till the are eighteen or twenty years old. Their mules are next in requeſt; th pace well, never fall, and are ſeldom tired; the higheſt price of a mule about forty-five pounds. Their Arabian breed of aſſes is the beſt in th world: they have ſmooth ſhining hair, they carry their heads lofty, thei feet are light, and they move them gracefully; ſome of them are valued a twenty pounds, being kept for riding, and their maſters love them f their lightneſs and eaſy going. Their beaſts of burden are the comm aſs, like our's, ſlow and heavy, and camels, of which there are two ſort northern and ſouthern; the latter, much the ſmaller, carry but ſeve hundred weight, the other can carry one thouſand three hundred; bo are profitable to their maſters, as coſting little or nothing to keep. Th camels' hair is the moſt profitable fleece of all the tame beaſts; fine ſtuf are made out of it, and, in Europe, hats, with a mixture of a little be ver. As Perſia is very mountainous, it is full of metals and mineral which they began to work upon in the laſt century much more than preceding times. Their diligence, in this reſpect, was owing to the gre Shah Abbas. The metals uſually to be met with are iron, ſteel, braſ and lead; minerals and mineral waters abound throughout Perſia; ſu phur and ſaltpetre are extracted out of the mountain of Damavend, whic ſeparates Taberiſtan from Irac. Wild beaſts are not very common Perſia, becauſe there are few foreſts; but in all woody countries, as Hircania, now called Taberiſtan, there are abundance of lions, bear tigers, leopards, porcupines, wild boars, jackals, and wolves; but t laſt not ſo numerous as any of the other ſpecies. Perſia is divided into t following provinces: Schirvan, which is the moſt northern province Perſia, and lies along the weſtern coaſt of the Caſpian Sea; Adirbeitzan Ghilan; Mezanderan, with Taberiſtan; Perſian Irak, or Ancient Pa thia; Chuſiſtan; Farſiſtan; Kerman, or Keriſtan; Mecran, or Makra Segeſtan; Sableſtan; and Choraſan; including Aſterabat and Dageſta Candahar was anciently a province of Perſia; but is now independen When the kingdoms of Media and Perſia were united, under Cyrus t Great, in the year of the world 3419, that prince having conquered B bylonia, erected the ſecond or Perſian monarchy upon the total ruin the Aſſyrian empire, and thereby extended the Perſian dominions throu Aſſyria, Armenia, and all Aſia Minor, to the very borders of Europ but this monarchy continued no longer than 206 years, in a ſucceſſion twelve kings, the third of whom, Darius Hyſtaſpes, invaded Gree with an army of 100,000 foot, and 10,000 horſe; a force ſufficient over-running all that country, if the virtue and bravery of the Greeks not exceeded what could poſſibly have been expected from men. T Greeks could not get together an army of above 10,000 men, and yet t handful of people ventured, under the conduct of Miltiades, to give Perſians battle, in the plains of Marathon, near Athens; and, with loſs of 192 men only, according to Herodotus, entirely defeated that i menſe army. Xerxes, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Darius, renewed the tempt againſt Greece, and, after ten years' preparation, invaded it w ſo large an army, that the whole land was, in a manner, covered, and tire rivers drunk dry by them; but this expedition did not prove more ſucc ful, for, after the battle, by land, at the Straits of Thermopylæ, and the engagement at Salamis, Xerxes was glad to retire, and leave his general M donius, with 300,000 men, to finiſh the war; which was, indeed, after put an end to, by the entire rout of the Perſian army, at the famous battle of Platæa. About 150 years after, Alexander, king of Macedon, invaded Aſia; fought the numerous Perſian armies, firſt at the river Granicus, in Phrygia; ſecondly, at Iſſus, in Cilicia; and, thirdly, at Arbela, in Aſſyria; in all which battles he obtained entire victories, and finally entered Babylon in triumph. At the grand partition of Alexander's dominions among his captains, Perſia was made part of the Syrian kingdom of Seleucus Nicanor, but did not continue long ſo; for, in the reign of Antiochus Theos, the grandſon of Selecus, the Parthians revolted, under the conduct of Arſaces, a nobleman of that country, who perſuaded the neighbouring nations to join with him, and aſſumed the title of king. He was ſucceeded by a race of princes, who were potent monarchs, and oppoſed the Romans with greater vigour than any other nation. This kingdom remained thus, under the Parthian government, from the year of the world 3718, to the year of Chriſt 228; when Artaxerxes, a noble Perſian, having ſlain Artabanus III. and repelled the Romans, aſcended the throne. This king is reckoned to have reſtored the ancient Perſian race, and from him began a new dynaſty, or race of kings, who, in twenty-eight generations, governed this country 405 years. In the year 634, the Saracens, under Omar, the ſucceſſor of Mohammed, defeated Hormiſdas II.; this put an end to that kingdom: ſo that Perſia became a part of the Saracen empire, and was governed by certain deputies, with the title of ſultans, under the grand caliph. In proceſs of time the ſultans of Perſia, Babylon, &c. quarrelling among themſelves, occaſioned ſeveral revolutions and fluctuations of power, which, in the end, brought in the Turks. Tangrolipix overcame the ſultan or king of Perſia, in the year 1030, and aſſumed the government of that country. He was ſucceeded by a race of Turkiſh princes, for about 200 years; and then a new dynaſty of Tartarian princes gained the government. Haalen, the firſt of theſe, became king of Perſia, in the year 1260, and was ſucceeded by eight of his poſterity, till the year 1337; when, upon the death of Abuſaid, the laſt of that houſe, the kingdom became divided amongſt ſeveral Tartar princes, till about the year 1400, when Tamerlane reduced the whole to his obedience, and left it to his ſon Mirza Charock; but that family did not hold it long, for, after continual feuds among themſelves, in a ſucceſſion of ſix generations, the laſt of whom was defeated and ſlain, in 1472, by Uſum Caſſan, an Armenian prince, who was, at that time, governor of Turcomania, and founded a new dynaſty, called the Armenian. There were five other princes of this line, the laſt of whom was ſucceſsful in war againſt the Sophian family, who then began to make a great figure in Perſia; but he was, at laſt defeated by Iſmael Sophi, the founder of the dynaſty of the Sophian race, who governed Perſia till within theſe few years. In the beginning of the preſent century, Nadir Khan, the ſon of a Perſian nobleman, on the borders of Tartary, was invited by the reigning Thamas to aſſiſt in quelling a rebellion, ſet on foot by Myrr Weis, the governor of Candahar, which he performed. But Nadir Khan, to whom Thamas has given the name of Thamas Kouli-Khan, that is, the ſlave of Thamas, thinking his ſervices not ſufficiently rewarded, and pretending that the king had a deſign againſt his life, or at leaſt to ſet him aſide, conſpired againſt his ſovereign, made him priſoner, and put him to death, as is ſuppoſed; after which he uſurped the throne, ſtyling himſelf Shah Nādir, or King Nadir. He afterwards laid ſiege to Candahar, of which a ſon of Myrr Weis had poſſeſſed himſelf. While he lay at this ſiege, the court of the great mogul being diſtracted by factions, one of the parties invited Shah Nadir to come to their aſſiſtance, and betrayed the mogul into his hands. Hereupon, having marched to Delhi, where having amaſſed the greateſt treaſure ever prince was maſter of, he returned to Perſia, giving the mogul his liberty, on condition of reſigning the provinces on the weſt ſide of the Indies to the crown of Perſia. He afterwards made a conqueſt of Uſbeck Tartary, and plundered Bukhara, the capital city. Then he marched againſt the Digiſtan Tartars, but loſt great part of his army in the mountains, without fighting. He defeated the Turks in ſeveral engagements, but laying ſiege to Bagdad, was twice compelled to raiſe the ſiege. He proceeded to change the religion of the Perſians to that of Omar, hanged up the chief-prieſts, put his own ſon to death, and was guilty of ſuch cruelty, that he was at length aſſaſſinated by his own relations, in 1747, who have been fighting for the crown ever ſince. The contending parties have been reduced to two, and, in the ſpring of the year 1763, Kerim Khan made himſelf maſter of all Perſia, by the defeat of Fat Ali Khan. The highways were ſince ſafe, trade recovered its vigour, caravans are very frequent, and between 15,000 and 20,000 families of that kingdom, who had retired to Bagdad, ſucceſſively returned to their own country. At firſt Kerim Khan declined the title of king, aſſuming only in his firmans, and on his coin, that of ſabelzaman, which ſignifies maſter of the preſent time; but he ſince, in the month of October, of the ſame year, convoked all the Perſian grandees, to meet him at Iſpahan, in order to aſſiſt at his coronation at Tauris. Perſia is an abſolute monarchy; the king's will is law, in all caſes; he judges of the lives and fortunes of his ſubjects, without regard to any other juſtice or law than his own pleaſure; and that often leads him to extravagant ſeverities. He has no eſtabliſhed council, but is adviſed by ſuch miniſters as are moſt in favour; and the reſolutions taken by the ladies in the haram frequently defeat the beſt laid deſigns. The crown is hereditary, excluding only the females; but the ſons of a daughter are allowed to inherit. The laws of Perſia exclude the blind from the throne; and this is the reaſon that the reigning prince uſually orders the eyes of all the males of the royal family, of whom he entertains any jealouſy, to be put out. The religion of the Perſians is the ſame in ſubſtance with that of the Turks; tho' no nations in the world hate one another ſo much on account of religion as they do. The true ground of their diviſion is, that the Turks pretend that Abubeker was the lawful ſucceſſor of Mahomet, Omar the ſucceſſor of Abubeker, Oſman of Omar, and then Ali; whereas the Perſians aſſert, that Ali ſucceeded Mahomet, or ought to have ſucceeded him, as being his ſon-in-law, and that the reſt were but ſo many uſurpers of his right. This is the reaſon that the Turks hold the Perſians to be heretics.

PERSIAN GULF, a ſea or inland lake, bounded on the north by Perſia and elſewhere by Arabia, except at the Eaſtern extremity, where it communicates with the Arabian Sea: about 500 miles from eaſt to weſt, and from 120 to 250 in breadth, from north to ſouth; the principal river which runs into it is the Euphrates. The ſouthern coaſt in particular is celebrated for its pearl fiſhery. Moſt part of the coaſts, both on the north and ſouth, belong to colonies of Arabians.

PERSKENSTEIN, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 2½ miles NNE. Ottmuchau.

PERSO, a town of Italy, in the country of Friuli: 10 miles NW. Udina.

PERSTAIN, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Boleſlaw: 14 miles NW. Jung Buntzel.

PERTELS, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 6 miles N. Bohmiſh Waidhofen.

PERTH, a town of Scotland, capital of the county to which it gives name, and one of the handſomeſt towns of the kingdom, ſtretching itſelf in length under the Grampian Hills, on the weſtern bank of the Tay, which is here croſſed by a handſome bridge of nine arches; ſo beautiful is the approach, that the Romans, on ſeeing the river, exclaimed "Ecce Tyberim." The town conſiſts of one principal wide ſtreet, well paved, but ill built; from which branch off two others on each ſide, at right-angles. The infirmary is a good building, finiſhed in the year 1750, on the ſite of the Carthuſian friary. The houſes of the Grey and Black Friars, in this town; the former founded by Lord Oliphant, in the year 1460, the latter by Alexander II. in the year 1231, were the firſt that felt the rage of reformation in Scotland, in 1559. The Black Friars ſtood without the north wall of Perth. Here James I. was murdered, in the year 1437, by Robert Graham, who gave him twenty-eight wounds, and the queen received two and was carried off. The king was buried in a very ſtately monument, in the Carthuſian monaſtery, called Monaſterium vallis virtutis, of his own founding; one of the moſt magnificent buildings in the kingdom, which, with the reſt, was deſtroyed by the populace. The only remains of this magnificent ſtructure is to be ſeen in the carved ſtones with which the ſouth-eaſt porch of St. John's church is built, now greatly decayed. The king's garment, full of ſtabs, was preſerved here after the reformation. The preſent ſtately pariſh-church, now divided into two kirks, belonged to one of theſe houſes. The linen manufacture brings a conſiderable revenue to this town, 150,000l. worth being annually exported, 10,000l. worth of wheat and barley; and 48,000l. worth of ſalmon. In the river here are found pearls, of which 10,000l. worth were ſent to London between the years 1761 and 1764, and ſold from 10s. to 36s. per ounce, but the avarice of the owners exhauſted the fiſhery. The houſe, and the very room, where the attempt of the Gowries to ſeize, or aſſaſſinate, the king, was ſuppoſed to have been made, is now converted into barracks for a train of artillery; but the back ſtair, down which the Ruthvens were thrown, is pulled down. This ſtrange event, however magnified or atteſted by contemporary writers, is made up of many improbabilities. The kings of Scotland, before James II. were crowned at Scone, and reſided at Perth, as the metropolis of the nation. James reſided, and was educated, in the caſtle of Edinburgh, and was crowned there, in the year 1437. The parliaments, and courts of juſtice, were removed from Perth to Edinburgh, but Perth kept its priority till the year 1482. After the battle of Falkirk, in the year 1298, Edward I. rebuilt the walls of Perth, and made it the reſidence of his deputies. Robert Bruce attacked it in the year 1306, when it was the head-quarters of the earl of Pembroke, the Engliſh guardian. The earl ſallied out, and defeated him at Methven. In 1311, he ſcaled the walls, after a ſix weeks' ſiege, took and burnt the town, and levelled the works. After the battle of Duplin, Baliol took poſſeſſion of, and fortified it. It was ſoon after blockaded, without ſucceſs, by the Scots, but it was ſurpriſed, and its fortifications razed the ſame year. It ſtood a long ſiege againſt the regent Robert, in the year 1339, and was taken by draining the ditch: the walls were repaired by James II. The firſt demolition of monaſteries began at Perth, in the year 1559; and the queen regent, by her perfidy and tyranny to the proteſtants, provoked them to beſiege and take poſſeſſion of the town. They marched thence to the relief of Stirling, with ropes about their necks; and a picture of this their march, painted in the town-clerk's office at Perth, is ſtill to be ſeen. The marquis of Montroſe ſeized the place after the battle of Tibbermoor, in the year 1644, and Cromwell made himſelf maſter of it in 1651, and the commiſſioners ordered a citadel to be built on the ſouth inch, capable of containing 500 men: now a green, beautifully planted. The earl of Mar lay here a conſiderable time, with his forces, in the year 1715, and the pretender was proclaimed. The town is ſuppoſed to have increaſed one-third ſince the year 1745. The inhabitants amount to 11,000: 28 miles NNW. Edinburgh. Lat. 56. 24. N.

PERTH AMBOY, ſee Amboy.

PERTHES, a town of France, in the department of the Seine and Marne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Melun: 2 leagues SSW. Melun.

PERTHES, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Marne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of St. Dizier: 2 leagues NW. St. Dizier.

PERTHSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north by the counties of Inverneſs and Aberdeen, on the eaſt by the counties of Angus, Fife, and Kinroſs, on the ſouth by the counties of Clackmannan, Stirling, and Dumbarton, and on the weſt by the counties of Dumbarton and Argyle: about ſixty miles from north to ſouth, and fifty from eaſt to weſt. It is divided into ſix diſtricts, Athol, Breadalbane, Gourie, Monteith, Stormont, and Strathern. Athol, which is the moſt northerly, is wild and mountainous; nor can any part be called level: however, conſiderable tracts are fertile in corn and paſture. There are many conſiderable lochs which abound in fiſh, particularly ſalmon; the greater of them diſcharge the waters into the Tay, which is the chief river of the county. On the borders of the county runs the great military road to the Highlands, over what are called the Black Mountains; the paſs (ſays Mr. Pennant) is extremely narrow between two high mountains, with the Garry running beneath, in a deep, darkſome, and rocky channel, overhung with trees, forming a ſcene of horrible grandeur. This place is memorable for the defeat of King William's army in 1689, and the fall of the brave viſcount of Dundee, at the moment of victory: here alſo a body of Heſſians, in 1746, made a full pauſe, refuſing to march farther. It appeared to them as the ne plus ultra of habitable country. This county ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament. The principal towns are Perth, Scone, Dumblain, Crieff, Blair, and Dunkeld.

PERTIGI, a town of the iſland of Sardinia: 19 miles SE. Caſtello Aragoneſe.

PERTUIS, a town of France, in the department of the Mouths of the Rhône, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Apt, near the Durance: 3 leagues N. Aix, and 4 SSE. Apt.

PERTUIS D'ANTIOCH, a ſtrait or narrow part of the ſea, between the Iſle of Oleron, and the Iſle of Ré.

PERTUIS BRETON, a narrow ſtrait of the ſea, between the Iſle of Ré, and the coaſt of France.

PERTUIS DE MAUMUSSON, a ſtrait between the Iſle of Oleron, and the coaſt of France, ſouth of the iſland, about a quarter of a league wide.

PERU, a country of South America, bounded on the north by the viceroyalty of New Grenada, on the eaſt by the provinces which depend on the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres, on the ſouth by Chili, and on the weſt by the Pacific Ocean, and extends from the 52d to the 63d degree of longitude weſt from Ferro, and from the 4th to the 22d degree of ſouth latitude. The Spaniards were unacquainted with Peru, till they were become maſters of Mexico; a young cacique, in the neighbourhood of the iſthmus of Darien, gave them the firſt information, in the year 1513, when 190 Spaniards attended by a thouſand Indians, loaded with their baggage, as porters and guides, croſſed the continent, and firſt diſcovered the Pacific Ocean, and the rich country of Peru, under the conduct of two ſoldiers of mean deſcent, Francis Pizarro and Diego Almagro. Huana Capac, the inca or emperor of Peru, had ſubdued Quito, and dying in the year 1529, left two ſons, one by a princeſs of the blood royal, the other by a daughter of the king of Quito, and divided between them his empire. Huaſcar reigned at Cuſco, and Atahualpa in Quito, but theſe two princes quarrelled, and engaged in a war, when Huaſcar was vanquiſhed, and made priſoner. At this time, Pizarro arrived, with the Spaniards. Some negociations took place between Atahualpa and Pizarro, which ended in the impriſonment and ſubſequent death of the inca. Huaſcar had been already put to death in priſon, by order of his brother. Some unavailing attempts were made to drive away the Spaniards, but the whole empire was ſoon compelled to ſubmit to the yoke. The empire of the incas, is, according to the account of the Peruvians themſelves, ſaid to have been founded by Manco Capac, and to have continued for thirteen generations. Theſe incas called themſelves the deſcendants of the ſun, which was the object of their adoration, as the ſource of light, of joy, and fertility; next to the ſun they worſhipped the moon and the ſtars. The lands of the kingdom, that were ſuſceptible of cultivation, were divided into three parts: one appropriated to the ſun, another to the inca, and a third to the people. The firſt were cultivated in common, as were, likewiſe, the lands of orphans, of widows, of old men, of the infirm, and of the ſoldiers who were with the army. Theſe were cultivated immediately after the lands appropriated to the ſun, and before thoſe of the emperor. The ſeaſon of this labour was announced by feſtivals: it was begun and continued with the ſound of muſical inſtruments, and the chanting of hymns. The emperor levied no tribute, and exacted nothing from his ſubjects, but that they ſhould cultivate his lands; the whole produce of which being depoſited in public magazines, was ſufficient to defray all expences of the empire. The lands dedicated to the ſun provided for the maintenance of the prieſts, and for the expences of conſecrating thoſe magnificent temples that were covered with gold, and whoſe roofs were of ſilver. The Peruvians, though at the very ſource of gold and ſilver, knew not the uſe of coin. They had neither commerce nor luxury; and the more minute arts, which owe their exiſtence to the immediate wants of ſocial life, were in a very imperfect ſtate among them. They had not even hieroglyphics, which, among all nations, were the firſt eſſays toward writing. All their ſciences conſiſted in memory, and all their arts in example. They learned their religion and their hiſtory by hymns, and their duties and profeſſions by labour and imitation. From the conqueſt, there hath only been one trifling inſurrection in Peru. An Indian of the province of Xauxa, who declared himſelf of the blood of the incas, was proclaimed king, in 1742. His countrymen, who flattered themſelves that they ſhould ſoon recover their religion, their laws, their lands, and their glory, flocked in crowds to his ſtandard; but they were beaten and diſperſed, after having made a conſiderable progreſs. This country, which is very irregular, may be divided into three claſſes. The principal Cordeleras form the firſt; the ſummits of theſe, ſays M. de la Condamine, are loſt in the clouds, and almoſt all of them are covered with enormous maſſes of ſnow, as old as the world. From ſeveral of theſe ſummits, which have in part tumbled down, and from thoſe immenſe heaps of ſnow, torrents of ſmoke and flame iſſue. Such are the ſummits of Colopaxi, Tongourargua, and Sangai. The greateſt part of the reſt have formerly been volcanos, or will, probably, one day become ſuch. Hiſtory has only preſerved to us, the æra of their eruptions ſince the diſcovery of America; but the pumice-ſtones, the calcined earths with which they are ſtrewn, and the evident veſtiges that the flame hath left, are authentic teſtimonies of the reality of former eruptions: their height is prodigious. From this boundary, which is where the ſnow never melts, not even in the torrid zone, one hardly ſees, in deſcending a hundred or a hundred and fifty toiſes down, any thing except naked rocks, or dry ſands: a little lower, one may perceive ſome moſs that covers the rocks, various kinds of heath, which, though green and damp, make a clear fire; round hillocks of ſpongy earth, on which grow ſmall radiated and ſtarry plants, whoſe petals are like the leaves of yew. Throughout the whole of this ſpace, the ſnow is only temporary, but it continues ſometimes whole weeks and months. Lower ſtill, the ground is commonly covered with a ſort of looſe graſs, which riſes a foot and a half high, or two feet. When we come down from theſe mountains, we find others that are leſs conſiderable, which occupy the middle of Peru. The ſummit of theſe is commonly cold, barren, and full of mines. The vallies between them are covered with numerous flocks, and ſeem to offer to agriculture the moſt copious harveſts. There are ſeldom above two months of winter here; and in the greateſt heat, we need only paſs out of the ſun into the ſhade, to enjoy the temperate zone. This rapid alternative of ſenſation is not, however, invariable in a climate which, by the diſpoſition of the ground alone, often changes in the courſe of a league. But let it be as it will, it is always found healthy. There is no malady peculiar to theſe countries, and thoſe of our climate ſeldom prevail there. An European veſſel, however, in 1719, brought thither an epidemic diſorder, which carried off a grear number of Spaniards and Meſtees, and above 200,000 Indians. A more fatal preſent ſtill, which theſe people have received in exchange for their gold, is the ſmall-pox. It ſhowed itſelf here, for the firſt time, in the year 1588, and has not failed ſince, to make, at intervals, inexpreſſible ravages. The people are not leſs expoſed to this fatal diſtemper on the coaſt, known by the name of Vallies. Their temperature is not the ſame as is elſewhere found in the ſame latitude. It is very agreeable; and though the four ſeaſons of the year are ſenſibly felt here, there is none that can, with propriety, be deemed inconvenient. The winter is the moſt ſtrongly marked. Whatever may be the cauſe of ſo regular a winter under the torrid zone, it is certain, that theſe vallies, which are covered with heaps of ſand, are abſolutely barren for a ſpace of more than a hundred leagues, from Truxillo to Lima. The reſt of the coaſt is leſs ſandy, but it is ſtill too much ſo to be fruitful. No fields are there found that can be ſtyled fertile, except in ſuch lands as are watered by the ſtreams which deſcend from the mountains. Rain might contribute to impart to the ſoil the fertility of which it is deſtitute, but it is never known to rain in Lower Peru. The ſame reaſons that prevent its raining in vallies, undoubtedly alſo hinder ſtorms. Thoſe of their inhabitants who never travelled in the mountains, are perfect ſtrangers to thunder and lightning. Their terror is equal to their aſtoniſhment, when, out of their country, they firſt behold ſo uncommon a ſpectacle. But they have a phænomenon much more dangerous and dreadful, and which, in its conſequences, leaves much deeper impreſſions in the human imagination than thunder, and the ravages that accompany it. Earthquakes, which in other countries are ſo rare, that whole generations paſs without beholding one, are ſo common in the vallies of Peru, that they have there contracted a habit of reckoning them as a ſeries of dates; and they are ſo much the more memorable, as their frequent return does not diminiſh their violence. There are few places on this extenſive coaſt, which preſent not moſt dreadful monuments of theſe horrible convulſions of the earth. The Peruvians were at firſt deprived of their poſſeſſions, as the Mexicans had been. Only a part of thoſe lands, which, in the times of the incas, had been conſecrated to the public occaſions, was left to them in common. Each native is ſubject to a poll-tax from the age of 18 to 50. The liberty of the Indians underwent the ſame fate as their property. Thoſe who were the ſlaves of government, and were employed in the labours indiſpenſably neceſſary for new eſtabliſhments, were ill fed and ill clothed. When there was no longer any occupation for them, they were transferred to private perſons, whoſe fiefs ſtood in need of hands to cultivate them. It is expreſsly prohibited by law, that the Peruvians ſhould be obliged to work in the ſubterraneous mines, and yet there is no miner, who by his influence, or his profuſion, cannot compel them to it: continual oppreſſion prevents the Indians from having any thing, even common neceſſaries; they ſow no maize but what is abſolutely neceſſary for them, and they conceal it in ſecret caverns. The heads of a family poſſeſs alone the ſecret of this depoſit, and go every eight days there to fetch proviſions for the week. In fine, the corregidors have, for the moſt part, appropriated to themſelves the excluſive right of ſelling to the Indians of their diſtrict the merchandiſe of Europe, and they either make them pay an exorbitant price for it, or oblige them to purchaſe what they do not want. The court of Madrid has given the Peruvians a Spaniſh protector, who is obliged to defend them; and a cacique of the country, who is charged with the management of their affairs.—But too often the protector ſells the Indians to any that will purchaſe them, and the cacique is too much debaſed to be able to oppoſe this oppreſſion. Religion has not more power than the laws; it has ſtill leſs. Theſe people go to church as they do to their labours impoſed upon them, execrating thoſe foreign barbarians, who overwhelm both their bodies and their ſouls with intolerable yokes and burdens. They have in general preſerved the religion of their anceſtors; and even in the great towns, where they are under the eyes of their tyrants, they have ſolemn days, on which they aſſume their ancient dreſs, and carry along the ſtreets the images of the ſun and moon. Some among them repreſent a tragedy, the ſubject of which is the death of Atahualpa. One day, perhaps, this tragedy will end in the maſſacre of the whole race of the murderers of Atahualpa. The Peruvians are moreover an inſtance of that profound ſtupidity in which it is in the power of tyranny to plunge men. They are fallen into a liſtleſs and univerſal indifference. The riches which their country hath offered them, do not tempt them; luxury, to which nature invites them, has no attraction for them. They are even inſenſible to honours. They are whatever one pleaſes, without any ill-humour or choice, caciques or mayos, the objects of diſtinction, or of public deriſion. They have loſt all their paſſions. That of fear itſelf has no effect on them, through the little attachment they have to life. They intoxicate themſelves and dance; theſe are all the pleaſures they have, when they are able to forget their miſery. Indolence is their predominant habit. "I am not hungry," they ſay to the perſon who would pay them for their labour. Among the animals of Peru are the llama, the vicuna, and guanaco. The llama, in ſeveral particulars, reſembles the camel, as in the ſhape of its neck, head, and ſome other parts, but has no bunch, and is much ſmaller, cloven-footed, and different in colour; for though moſt of them are brown, ſome are white, others black, and others of different colours: its pace reſembles that of a camel, and its height is equal to that of an aſs betwixt a year and two old. The Indians uſe them as beaſts of carriage; and they anſwer very well for any load under a hundred weight. Anciently the Indians uſed to eat the fleſh of them, and ſtill continue to make that uſe of thoſe which are paſt labour. They ſay there is no difference betwixt it and mutton, except that the former is ſomething ſweeter: it is a very docile creature, and eaſily kept. Its whole defence is to eject from its noſtrils ſome viſcoſities, which are ſaid to give the itch to any on which they fall; ſo that the Indians, who firmly believe this, are very cautious of provoking the llama. In the ſouthern provinces of Peru, are two other animals, not very different from the llama; theſe are the vicuna and the guanaco: the only difference between them being, that the vicuna is ſomething ſmaller, its wool ſhorter and finer, and brown all over the body, except the belly, which is whitiſh. The guanaco, on the contrary, is much larger, its wool long and harſh: but the ſhape of both is pretty nearly alike. Theſe laſt are of great ſervice in mines, carrying metals in ſuch rugged roads as would be impracticable to any other beaſt. Among the birds are found the gallinazos, a ſpecies of the vulture. Theſe birds often make it their ſole employment to watch the female alligator, during the dry ſeaſon, when ſhe lays her eggs, the ſides of the river not being then covered with water; the bird concealing itſelf among the branches of a tree, where it ſilently obſerves the female alligator, till ſhe has laid her eggs, and retires; but ſhe is no ſooner under water, than the galinazos darts down on the repoſitory, and with beak, claws, and wings, tears up the ſand, and devours the eggs, leaving only the ſhells. In the deſert country only are found condors and zumbadores. The condor is the largeſt bird in theſe parts of the world; its colour and appearance reſemble thoſe of the galinazos, and ſometimes it ſoars from the higheſt mountains ſo as to be almoſt out of ſight: and by its being ſeldom ſeen in low places, a ſubtile air ſeems beſt to agree with it; though ſome, which have been tamed when young, live in the villages and plantations: they are extremely carnivorous, and are known frequently to ſeize and fly away with lambs, that feed on the heaths. The zumbador, or hummer, is a night bird, peculiar to the mountains and deſerts; and they are ſeldom ſeen, though frequently heard, both by the ſinging and a ſtrange humming made in the air by the rapidity of their flight. The gardens of all kinds in the villages are much frequented by the humming-bird, very remarkable both for its ſmallneſs and the vivid colours of its feathers. Peru is governed by a viceroy, and is divided into the archbiſhopric of Lima, the biſhopric of Arequipa, the biſhopric of Cuſco, the biſhopric of Guamanga, and the biſhopric of Truxillo, each of which is ſub-divided into juriſdictions. The revenue ariſing to the crown of Spain is very great, but the amount is not well known.

PERUGIA, a city of Italy, and capital of the province ſo called: the ſee of a biſhop, immediately under the Pope. The citadel was built by Pope Paul III. to keep the citizens in awe, under pretence of founding an hoſpital. It has ſeveral churches, according to Berenger, forty-ſix in the city and ſuburbs, and forty-one convents: it has likewiſe three colleges, three academies, and an univerſity: 60 miles SE. Florence, and 72 N. Rome. Long. 30. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 6. N.

PERUGIANO, a province of Italy, bounded on the north by the duchy of Urbino, on the eaſt by Umbria, on the ſouth by the Orvietan, and on the weſt by Tuſcany: the greateſt extent from north to ſouth 28 miles, and about as much from eaſt to weſt: the Tiber croſſes it from north to ſouth, and is the only river of conſequence. In it is a large lake, which abounds in fiſh, formerly called Lacus Thraſimenus, near which Flaminius was defeated by Hannibal. The country of Perugia is exceedingly fertile, and abounds in corn and wine. Perugia is the capital.—This country war overrun by the French, in the month of February, 1797.

PERVISSE, a town of Flanders: 2 leagues WNW. Dixmude.

PERUSE (La), a town of France, in the department of the Charente, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Confolent: 3 leagues S. Confolent.

PERUVELS, a town of Hainaut: 5 miles N. Condé.

PERWIS, a town of Brabant: 2 leagues NE. Gemblours.

PERZENE, a town of Italy, in the Bologneſe: 8 miles NE. Bologna.

PE-SAN, a ſmall iſland near the coaſt of China, in the Eaſtern Sea. Long. 137. 45. E. Ferro. Lat. 26. 52. N.

PESARO, or Pezaro, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Urbino, at the mouth of the Foglia, on the Adriatic, the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Urbino. It contains eight churchea and twelve convents. The figs and olives which grow in the environs are in great eſtimation: 15 miles NE. Urbino, and 38 NW. Ancona. Long. 30. 34. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 56. N.

PESCARA, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Abruzzo Citra, ſituated at the mouth of a river of the ſame name, which runs into the Adriatic, fortified and defended by a caſtle. It was once the ſee of a biſhop, removed to Atri: 10 miles N. Civita-di-Chieti. Long. 31. 53. E. Ferro. Lat. 42. 27. N.

PESCARA, a river of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, which runs into the Adriatic, at Peſcara.

PESCATAWAY, a town of the United States of America, in Maryland: 25 miles SW. Annapolis.

PESCHIERA, a town of Italy, in the Veroneſe, ſituated on the ſouth coaſt of Lake Garda: 15 miles W. Verona, and 17 NNW. Mantua.

PESCHISE, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Capitanata: 11 miles NW. Vieſte.

PESCIA, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Tuſcany; the ſee of a biſhop. It contains three parochial, ſeven other churches, and five convents. The oil made here is much eſteemed: 10 miles SW. Piſtoya.

PESCINA, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Abruzzo Ultra: 4½ miles SE. Celano.

PEST, a royal and free town of Hungary, on the eaſt ſide of the Danube, oppoſite Buda. Here is held the ſupreme court of appeal : a large military hoſpital ; ſix convents, and ſeveral churches. The town is ſurrounded with a wall and moat. In the year 1526, and again in the year 1541, it was taken by the Turks, who held it till 1602, when it was retaken by the Hungarians, and defended by them againſt a freſh attack of the Turks. But in the following year, being abandoned through fear, it fell once more into the hands of the Turks, who, in 1684, ſet fire to it, and marched to Buda. The imperialiſts upon this, indeed, took poſſeſſion of the town, but abandoned it again, not returning till two years after, when it was reduced to a very poor condition, but was raiſed by the liberality of the emperor Leopold. In 1721, a commiſſion met here to enquire into the religious grievances of the proteſtants, and was cloſed the following year at Preſburg : 28 miles S. Gran, and 103 SE. Vienna.

PESTI, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Principato Citra, ſituated near the ruins of the ancient Peſtum or Poſſidonia, which was ruined by the Guiſcards, and abandoned in the 11th century. PE-TCHE-LI, a province of China, bounded on the north by the great wall which ſeparates it from Tartary, on the eaſt by the Sea of Corea, on the ſouth by the provinces of Chang-tong and Honan, and on the weſt by Chan-ſi. It is divided into nine different counties, which have each a fou, or principal city of the firſt rank, on which ſeveral other towns are dependent. Theſe towns are 140 in number ; 20 of which are tcheou, or towns of the ſecond rank, and 120 are hien, or towns of the third rank ; beſides an infinite number of boroughs and villages, ſome of which are as large as cities, but have not that name, becauſe they are not encloſed with walls or ditches. The air is temperate ; yet though its greateſt latitude does not exceed forty-two degrees, the rivers are frozen four months in the year, viz. from about the middle of November to the middle of March. The rainy ſeaſon is only towards the end of July, and the beginning of Auguſt : it ſeldom rains at any other time, but the dew which falls in the night, moiſtens the earth, which is obſerved to be dewy every morning. This moiſture dries at the riſing of the ſun, which is ſucceeded by a very fine duſt, which penetrates every where, and gets into rooms which are ſhut up with the utmoſt care. The country is plain, but ſandy, and not very fruitful : it produces leſs rice than the ſouthern parts, beca it has but few canals ; nevertheleſs, beſides what is ſown along the ſide of the rivers, there is ſome ſown dry in ſeveral places, which grows very well, but is hard, and therefore not ſo eaſily dreſſed as the other ſort. In other reſpects, it plentifully produces all ſorts of grain, and chiefly whea and millet ; all ſorts of cattle, pulſe, and great plenty of fruit, ſuch a apples, pears, plums, cheſnuts, walnuts, figs, peaches, grapes, &c. The rivers abound in fiſh, and the mountains have mines of coal. Among th different ſorts of animals of this province, there are a particular ſort o cats, which the Chineſe ladies are very fond of, and which they keep very tenderly ; they have long hair and hanging ears. But what renders thi province the moſt conſiderable is, that the riches of the whole empire ar brought hither, the northern and ſouthern provinces, ſtriving to outv each other, in furniſhing it with every thing they produce, that is moſt uncommon and delicious. The people, in general, are not reckoned ſo polite, nor ſo apt to learn the ſciences, as thoſe of the ſouthern provinces ; bu they are ſtronger, more warlike, and better able to undergo the fatigue and hardſhips of war. In this they reſemble the other Chineſe who inhabit the northern provinces. Peking is the capital.

PETCHORA, a river of Ruſſia, which riſes in the eaſtern part of th province of Uſtiug, Long. 77. Lat. 62. 20. and empties itſelf into the Fro zen Ocean, Long. 68. 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 67. 40. N.

PETERKINGEN, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Berne : miles N. Berne.

PETERSBERG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxon and duchy of Magdeburg : 48 miles SSE. Magdeburg.

PETERSBURG, or St. Peterſburg, a city of Ruſſia, and capital of whole empire, ſituated on the river Neva. The beginning and increaſe this great city were very extraordinary ; for, till the year 1703, the o buildings on the ſpot where this flouriſhing metropolis now ſtands, w two ſmall fiſhing-huts. But Peter the Great having in that year taken town Nyenſchanze, ſeated on the river Neva, and made himſelf maſter this country, its commodious ſituation for the Baltic trade determined h to build a town and fortreſs here. He immediately began to put his p ject in execution, calling the town by his own name. At firſt it was ſigned only for a place of arms, to which all kinds of military ſtores mig be conveniently brought from the interior parts of the empire ; ſo th by that means, the war with Sweden might be carried on with more gour and diſpatch. At this time both the public edifices and priv houſes were built only with timber, The dock and the town had no ot fortifications than a mean rampart of earth ; nor were the ſtreets pa In ſhort, if the czar had been then deprived of the place, the loſs of it wo not have been great. But the victory of Pultawa, and the conqueſt Livonia, inſpired Peter I. with hopes that he ſhould be able to preſerve conqueſts, and to render Peterſburg the capital of his empire. His fo neſs for maritime affairs, a deſire for perpetuating his name, and his av ſion to Moſcow, where, in his younger years, he had received ſo much treatment, were the chief motives that induced him to lay the foundat of this new ſeat of empire ; to which ſome add another inducement, na ly, the pleaſure of mortifying the Ruſſians who were ſo ſtrongly attac to the city of Moſcow. Upon this Peter I. ordered the caſtle to be b with ſtone, the admiralty to be walled in with the ſame materials, an the buildings to be erected in a handſomer and more durable manner, gardens to be laid out. In the year 1714, he removed the council to terſburg, and handſome edifices were erected, in a ſtraight line, for public offices, which, in 1718, were alſo tranſlated hither. The prin families likewiſe, were ordered to make this their reſidence, and b houſes according to their abilities. But all this occaſioned an irregul in the buildings ; for the ſituation of the town was not preciſely lai till the year 1721. The nobility and burghers had been directed to their houſes on the iſland of Peterſburg ; and not a few buildings public and private were accordingly erected there. But afterwards emperor determined that the whole town ſhould ſtand on the Iſland of Waſili-Oſtrow. The ſtreets were marked out; the canals were dug; the iſland was to be fortified with 57 baſtions, and the nobility had their houſes to begin a ſecond time. However the death of the czar put a ſtop to the execution of this plan; and the ſtone buildings which had been erected went to ruin. The reluctance of the Ruſſian nobility to ſettle at Peterſburg was no more than what was natural; as they can neither live ſo cheap nor ſo commodiouſly here as they did at Moſcow. The country about Peterſburg is none of the moſt fertile; ſo that proviſions are brought to that city from a great diſtance, and muſt be paid for in ready money, which was no ſmall grievance to the nobility, who chiefly ſubſiſted on the produce of their eſtates, but ſeldom abounded in money. Beſides, Moſcow ſeemed much fitter for the imperial ſeat; being in the centre of the empire, from whence juſtice might be more eaſily adminiſtered, and the national revenue be received and diſburſed with more conveniency and diſpatch. Peterſburg, beſides other inconveniencies, ſeemed to them to lie too near the Swediſh frontiers. However, this city in the time of Peter I. became large and ſplendid; and under his ſucceſſors received additional improvements; ſo that it is now ranked among the largeſt and moſt elegant cities in Europe. Peterſburg lies partly on the continent, and partly on ſeveral iſlands formed by the branches of the Neva. The low and ſwampy ſoil on which it ſtands, has been conſiderably raiſed with trunks of trees, earth, and ſtone. Its ſituation, however, is pleaſant, and the air ſalubrious. The city is about ſix Engliſh miles in length, and about as many in breadth, and has neither gates nor a wall. The river Neva is about 800 paces broad, near Peterſburg, but has not every where a proportionate depth of water; ſo that large merchant ſhips are cleared at Kronſtadt; but the men of war, built at Peterſburg, are conveyed to Kronſtadt by means of certain machines called camels. Succeeding ſovereigns have continued to embelliſh Peterſburg, but none more than the late empreſs; who may, without exaggeration, be called its ſecond foundreſs. Notwithſtanding, however, all theſe improvements, it bears every mark of an infant city, and is ſtill, as Mr. Wraxal juſtly obſerves, "only an immenſe outline, which will require future empreſſes and almoſt future ages to complete." The ſtreets in general, are broad and ſpacious, and three of the principal ſtreets, which meet in a point at the admiralty, and reach to the extremities of the ſuburbs, are at leaſt two miles in length. Moſt of them are paved, but a few of them are ſtill ſuffered to remain floored with planks. Dr. Buſching ſays there are 600 houſes built of ſtone, the reſt of timber. Mr. Coxe, on the contrary, ſays, that the brick houſes are ornamented with white ſtucco only, and that there are only two ſtone buildings in Peterſburg, the church of St. Iſaac, and at a place given by the empreſs to prince Orlov. This city, from its low ſituation, is ſubject to inundations, and in the year 1777, the waters of the Neva overflowed, and in ſeveral ſtreets roſe four feet and a half in depth, and deſtroyed ſeveral buildings. An academy is eſtabliſhed at Peterſburg, for the inſtruction of 200 ſtudents, deſigned to be maſters of the provincial ſchools. The Imperial Academy of Sciences owes its inſtitution to Peter the Great. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at about 126,700. The value of the exports in Britiſh ſhips, in the year 1777, amounted to 1,508,782l. ſterling, and the goods imported in the ſame year were eſtimated at 423,942l. The government of Peterſburg is bounded on the north by the Gulf of Finland, the government of Viborg, the Lake of Ladoga, and the government of Olonetz, on the ſouth-eaſt by the government of Novgorod, on the ſouth by the government of Pſkov, and on the weſt by the Gulf of Finland, the government of Revel, and the Tchudſkoe Lake, which ſeparates it from the government of Riga. Its form is an irregular triangle, about 550 miles in circumference. Peterſburg is 540 miles NNE. Warſaw. Long. 47. 44. E. Warſaw. Lat. 59. 56. N.

PHILADELPHIA, a city of the United States of America, capital of Pennſylvania, and of the United States, firſt founded in the year 1682, by the great Mr. Penn, by whom the town was incorporated, in the year 1701, and endowed with a privilege of chooſing a mayor, recorder, aldermen, common-council, ſheriff, and town-clerk. It is ſituated on a neck of land, at the confluence of the two fine rivers Delaware and Schulkil. It was laid out in form of a parallelogram, or long ſquare, and deſigned to extend two miles from river to river, and to compoſe eight long ſtreets, which are to be interſected at right angles, by ſixteen others, each a mile in length, broad, ſpacious, and even; with proper ſpaces left for the public buildings, churches, and market-places. In the centre is a ſquare of ten acres, round which the public buildings are diſpoſed. The two principal ſtreets, called High-ſtreet, and Broad-ſtreet, are each 100 feet in breadth, and moſt of the houſes have a ſmall garden and orchard; from the rivers are cut ſmall canals, equally agreeable and beneficial. The wharfs are fine and ſpacious; the principal 200 feet wide, and the water ſo deep, that a veſſel of 500 tons' burden may lay her broadſide to it. The warehouſes are large, numerous, and commodious; and the docks for ſhip-building are ſo well adapted to their purpoſes, that twenty ſhips have been ſeen on the ſtocks at the ſame time. In the year 1790, a new charter of incorporation was obtained, in ſome reſpects different from the firſt. The churches or places ſet apart for public worſhip, are twenty-ſix for Chriſtians of different perſuaſions, and a ſynagogue for Jews. The number of houſes in Philadelphia, in the year 1792, was 5000, and the number of inhabitants 40,000. In the year 1786, 910 veſſels, great and ſmall, were entered at the cuſtom-houſe, in Philadelphia, and in the year 1787, the number was 780. The principal exports are wheat, flour, Indian corn, flax-ſeed, beef, and rice. Long. 75. 10. W. Greenwich. Lat. 39. 57. N. —In the month of October, 1777, this city was taken by the Britiſh troops. In the year 1793, a great number of the inhabitants were carried off by a peſtilential diſorder; according to the moſt authentic account, upwards of 4000 periſhed in the months of Auguſt, September, October, and November.

PHILIP ISLANDS, two ſmall iſlands in the South Pacific Ocean, diſcovered by captain Hunter, in the year 1791, on his return from New South Wales, to England. He ſays, on the 14th (of July) in the morning, we ſaw land, bearing north; this we found to be two iſlands, joined together, or nearly ſo, by a long ſandy ſpit, above water, which reached for about two-thirds of the diſtance from the eaſtmoſt or largeſt iſland, to the weſtmoſt, which is ſmall. All round the largeſt is a ſand bank, above water, which extends from the foot of the higher land about half a mile into the ſea, and may have ſhoal water from it. We ſaw on the beach a few natives running along ſhore, as the ſhip ſailed paſt. Theſe iſlands are dangerous to people in the night, on account of the ſandy ſpits, which project from them; they were covered with ſhrubs, and had but few tall trees on them, and the land is but low; the latitude of the large or eaſtmoſt iſland is, 8. 6. N. and longitude 140. 3. E. I did at firſt ſuppoſe them to have been a part of the New Carolines, but they ſeem to lie quite alone, and are about five miles aſunder. I called them Phillip Iſlands, after Arthur Phillip, the governor of New South Wales. Long. 140. 3. E. Greenwich. Lat. 8. 6. N.

PICO, one of the Azores, ſo called from a very high mountain, terminating like Teneriffe, in a peak, and reputed by ſome writers equal to it in height. The mountain Pico, which gives name to the iſland, is filled with diſmal dark caverns or volcanos, which frequently vomit out flames, ſmoke, and aſhes, to a great diſtance. At the foot of this mountain, towards the eaſt, is a ſpring of freſh water, generally cold, but ſometimes ſo heated with the ſubterraneous fire, as to ruſh forth in torrents, with a kind of ebullition like boiling water, equalling that in heat, and ſending forth a ſtream of ſulphureous fœtid vapours, liquefied ſtones, minerals, and flakes of earth all on fire. The circumference of Pico is computed at about fifteen leagues, and its moſt remarkable places are Pico, Lagoas, Santa Cruce or Cruz, San Sebaſtian, Peſquin, San Rocko, Playa, and Magdalena; the inhabitants of which live wholly on the produce of the iſland, in great plenty and comfort. The cattle are various, numerous, and excellent in their ſeveral kinds; it is the ſame with the vine and its juice, prepared into different wines, the beſt in the Azores. Beſides cedar and other timber, they have a kind of wood which they call teixo, ſolid and hard as iron, and veined, when finely poliſhed, like a rich ſcarlet tabby, which colour it has in great perfection. The longer it is kept, the more beautiful it grows; hence it is, that the teixo-tree is felled only for the king's uſe, or by his order, and is prohibited from being exported as a common article of trade. Long. 10. 30. The ſtreets are broad, and run in a ſtraight line, and the houſes are built and furniſhed in the Dutch taſte. This town is frequented by people of various nations, ſome of whom are ſettled here, and others belong to the foreign ſhips in the harbour. Veſſels of great burden are cleared, and take in their lading here; for the Friſch Haff has not a ſufficient depth of water to carry them up to Konigſberg. The fort is nearly a regular pentagon. The baſtions make a grand appearance; and all the buildings belonging to the fortifications are ſtrong, handſome, and regular. It has alſo a magazine for military ſtores. Below the gate of the caſtle is a ſtone equeſtrian ſtatue of Frederick William the Great; and over the gate a watch-tower is erected, where a centinel ſtands upon duty day and night. There is alſo a church in the fort, which ſerves both for the Lutherans and Calviniſts. Over the gate, on one ſide of the entrance towards the outworks, ſtands the image of Mars, in a bold attitude, looking towards Sweden. The fort is well planted with cannon. The peninſula or tongue of land along which the road from Pillau to Fiſchhauſen lies, is called The Paradiſe of Pruſſia, from its extreme pleaſantneſs and fertility; for it yields not only the neceſſaries of life in great plenty, but alſo every thing that contributes to pleaſure and entertainment. Near the fort is a fine plain, where the Friſch Haff forms a fine ſemi-circular bay, which is frequented by great numbers of ſwans, ſea-mews, wild ducks, and other water fowl. On the other ſide of this bay lies Alt-Pillau or Old Pillau, inhabited by fiſhermen: 22 miles WSW. Konigſberg. Long. 37. 46. E. Ferro. Lat. 54. 37. N.

PISA, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Tuſcany, and the capital of a territory, formerly an independent republic, ſituated on the Arno, which runs into the ſea about 10 miles below; founded by the Arcadians. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and has an univerſity, founded in the year 1339. The cathedral is a vaſt building, the three doors are of bronze, and ſaid to have been brought from the temple of Jeruſalem. It contains many other public buildings, and near it are ſome celebrated hot baths. It is ſurrounded by walls, and defended by an old caſtle and a fort. The citadel is a new building. The air is wholeſome in winter, but unhealthy in ſummer. The territory of Piſa affords all the comforts of life, including plenty of corn and wine. The city of Piſa is very ſpacious and extenſive, but does not contain at preſent above ſixteen thouſand inhabitants, though formerly they were computed at one hundred thouſand. The Piſans, when free, were a commercial people, and extremely tenacious of their liberties. The form of their government was republican, and the wars between them and the Florentines, who at laſt ſubdued them, were long and bloody. Their neighbourhood to Leghorn, which is now the chief port in the Mediterranean, though formerly of little or no note for trade, has contributed greatly to the decay of Piſa. Between Piſa and Leghorn is a canal, 16 Italian miles in length: 42 miles W. Florence, and 48 NW. Sienna.

PISCO, a town of South America, in the archbiſhopric of Lima, and juriſdiction of Ica, Piſco, and Naſca, formerly ſituated on the coaſt of the South Sea; but now a quarter of a league from it. The removal happened on October 19, 1682, occaſioned by ſo violent an earthquake, that the ſea retired half a league, and then returned with ſuch violence, that it overflowed almoſt as much land beyond, that its bounds deſtroying the whole town of Piſco, the ruins of which are ſtill viſible, extending from the ſhore to the new town. The whole town conſiſts of 300 families, moſt of them Meſtizoes, Mulattoes, and Blacks; the whites being much the ſmalleſt number. The road of Piſco is capacious enough to hold a royal navy; but open towards the north, though that is of very little conſequence, the wind being rarely in that quarter, and never dangerous; whereas the road is ſheltered from the uſual winds, namely, thoſe between the ſouth-weſt and ſouth-eaſt: 110 miles SSE. Lima. Long. 58. 25. W. Ferro. Lat. 13. 25. S.

PITTSBURG, a town of the United States of America, in Pennſylvania, on the weſtern ſide of the Allegany Mountains; is beautifully ſituated on a point of land between the Allegany and Monongahela rivers, and about a quarter of a mile above their confluence. It contained, in 1781, 140 houſes and 700 inhabitants, who are preſbyterians and epiſcopalians. The ſurrounding country is very hilly, but fertile, and well ſtored with excellent coal. The rivers abound with fine fiſh, ſuch as pike, perch, and cat-fiſh, which are all much larger than the ſame ſpecies on the eaſtern ſide of the mountains. This town is laid out on Penn's plan, and is a thoroughfare for the incredible number of travellers from the eaſtern and middle ſtates, to the ſettlements on the Ohio, and increaſes with aſtoniſhing rapidity. This place was formerly in the hands of the French, and then called Fort du Queſne, afterwards called Fort Pitt, and now Pittsburg. General Braddock, at the head of a party of Britiſh troops, as he was advancing to take it, in the year 1756, fell into an ambuſcade, was defeated and killed. PIURA, a town of South America, and capital of a juriſdiction of the ſame name, in the biſhopric of Truxillo. This was the firſt Spaniſh ſettlement in that country, and was founded in the year 1531, by Don Franciſco Pirrano, who alſo built the firſt church in it. It was originally called St. Miguel de Piura, and ſtood in the vally of Targaſala, from whence it was removed on account of the badneſs of the air, to its preſent ſituation, which is on a ſandy plain. The houſes are built either of a brick dried in the ſun, or a kind of cane called quincas, and few of them have any ſtory. The corrigidor and an officer for the royal revenue reſide here and at Payta ſix months alternately. The town of Piura contains about 1500 inhabitants, among which are ſome families of rank. The climate is hot and very dry, rain being ſeldom known here; notwithſtanding which it is very healthy. It has a river of great advantage to the inhabitants, as well as to the adjacent country, the ſoil of which is ſandy, and therefore penetrated with greater eaſe by the water, and the country being level, the water is eaſily conveyed to different parts by canals. But in ſummer the river is dry, the little water that then deſcends from the mountains being abſorbed by the ſoil before it reaches the city; when the inhabitants have no other method of procuring water than by digging wells in the bed of the river, the depth of which muſt be proportioned to the length of time the drought has continued. Piura has an hoſpital under the care of the Bethlehemites; and is remarkable for the great number of patients cured of the venereal diſeaſe: 25 miles SSE. Payta.

PLACENTIA BAY, a ſpacious bay, on the ſouth coaſt of Newfoundland, which forms a good harbour for veſſels, and is greatly frequented by ſhips employed in the cod-fiſhery. The entrance of it is a narrow channel, through which but one ſhip can paſs at a time: but the water is deep enough for the largeſt, and the harbour is capacious enough to hold 150 ſail of ſhips, which are there ſecure againſt all winds, and can fiſh as quietly as in a river. Before the narrow channel is a road of a league and a half in extent; but expoſed to the weſterly winds, which here often blow with great violence. What renders the channel ſo narrow, is a ridge of dangerous rocks, which muſt be left on the ſtarboard ſide in going into the bay, and on this ridge the French had formerly a fort, called St. Louis. The currents are very ſtrong, ſo that ſhips muſt be towed through the channel. The great ſtrand, or drying place for fiſh, which is about a league in extent, lies between two very ſteep hills, one of which on the ſouth-ſouth-weſt, is ſeparated from the ſtrand by a ſmall rivulet, which runs out of the channel, and forms a kind of lake, called the Little Bay, in which plenty of ſalmon is caught. The great ſtrand is large enough to dry fiſh ſufficient to load threeſcore ſhips. Beſides this, there is another called the Little Strand, uſed by the inhabitants in drying their fiſh, which they catch all along the coaſt. On both theſe places fiſh may be laid to dry without any danger. Along the above-mentioned rivulet, the French built little huts, with branches of pine-trees, for drying their fiſh in rainy weather. Near this are the houſes of the inhabitants, which form a town, called Placentia. Long. 54. to 55. 10. W. Greenwich. Lat. 47. to 47. 50. N.

PLATA (La), a river of South America, which ſeems to be formed by the union of the rivers Parana and Paraguay, in Lat. 27. 45. S. It was firſt diſcovered by Juan Dias de Salis, in the year 1515, who ſailed up it as far as an iſland which lies in 34. 40. S. The mouth, near 60 leagues in breadth, is ſuppoſed to have been called the river of Plata, from the great quantity of ſilver found by thoſe who firſt viſited the countries lying on its banks ; for it was originally called The River Salis, from its firſt diſcoverer ; who ſeeing ſome Indian huts, as he ſailed up the river, imprudently went on ſhore, with ten men, who were all murdered by the ſavages. The river Plata receives ſeveral conſiderable ſtreams in its courſe, ſo that it ſometimes ſwells to ſuch a prodigious degree, that the lands on each ſide, for ſeveral leagues, are overflowed, and, like thoſe of Egypt, rendered remarkably fertile by the inundation. The current of this river, where it falls into the ſea, is ſo rapid, that the water is freſh ſome leagues diſtant from its mouth. The water is alſo very clear, ſweet, and wholeſome. The river abounds with ſurpriſing plenty and variety of fiſh, and the banks are frequented by a great number of very beautiful birds. The diſtance from the conflux of the Paraguay and Parana, to the mouth of the river, is near 200 leagues, and all the way interſperſed with delightful iſlands, and navigable by the largeſt ſhips.

PLATA (La), a city of South America, in the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres ; the ſee of an archbiſhop, and capital of a province of the ſame name, built in the year 1539, by captain Pedro Anzures, by order of Gonſalo Pizarro. It ſtands in a plain, environed by eminences, which defend it from all winds. The temperature of the air in ſummer is very mild ; nor is there any conſiderable difference throughout the year, except in the winter, when tempeſts of thunder and lightning are common, and the rains of pretty long continuance, but all the other parts of the year the air is bright and ſerene. The houſes have one ſtory beſides the ground floor : they are covered with tiles, and are very roomy and convenient, with delightful gardens planted with European fruit-trees ; but water is ſo ſcarce, that they have hardly enough to ſupply the neceſſary purpoſes of life ; and the little they have is fetched from the ſeveral public fountains diſperſed in different parts of the city. The inhabitants conſiſt of Indians and Spaniards, and amount to about 14,000. The town has the name of L Plata from its being built near ſilver-mines. Plata was erected into a bi ſhopric in the year 1551, the place having then the title of city ; and, i the year 1608, was raiſed to an archbiſhopric. The cathedral is large of good architecture, and finely adorned with paintings and gildings. Th city of La Plata has alſo an univerſity, dedicated to St. Francis Xavier the chairs of which are filled indifferently with ſecular, clergy, or laymen but the rector was formerly always a Jeſuit. The magiſtracy, or corporation, as in all other cities of this country, conſiſts of regidores, who ar people of diſtinction with the corregidor at their head ; and from them ar annually choſen two ordinary alcades, for maintaining order in the city Long. 49. W. Ferro. Lat. 19. 30. S.

PLATA (La), a province and archbiſhopric of South America, in th government of Buenos Ayres. It is divided into fourteen juriſdictions It is an extenſive country, ſituated on the banks of the river Plata, extending itſelf on each ſide of that famous ſtream about 200 leagues in length from north to ſouth, and about 100 in breadth, from eaſt to weſt. Th boundaries, however, muſt not be conſidered as abſolutely fixed, becauſ large parts of it are uninhabited, and ſome of them hardly known. Th climate is very moderate and healthy, being chiefly in the ſouthern temperate zone. The winter months are thoſe of May, June, and July, whe the nights are indeed very cold, but the days moderately warm ; the fro is neither violent nor laſting, and the ſnows very inconſiderable : but th country is greatly infeſted by ſerpents, eſpecially near the banks of the ri ver Plata.

POLAND, a country of Europe, but, probably, before this article makes its appearance in the world, no nation; and, while we are deſcribing things as they are, the indignant Pole may ſay, with a ſigh, ſuch things were! Poland is bounded on the north by Pruſſia, Courland, and Ruſſia, on the eaſt by Ruſſia, on the ſouth by Hungary and Moldavia, and on the weſt, by Sileſia, Pomerania, and Moravia; about 800 miles in length, and 560 in breadth. Poland, in its utmoſt latitude, included thirteen provinces, or countries; 1. Great Poland, or Wielkopolſka Prowincya, called alſo Lower Poland, which included the palatinates of Poſen, or Poſnania, Kaliſh, Siradia, Lenczicz, and Rawa; 2. Cujavia, including the palatinates of Brſeſkie and Wladiſlaw; 3. Maſovia, containing the palatinates of Czerſk and Ploczko; 4. Poliſh Pruſſia, including Pomerelia, the palatinate of Culm, the government of Marienberg and Ermeland; 5. Little Poland, containing the palatinates of Cracow, Sandomir, and Lublin; 6. Podlachia, or the palatinate of Bielſk; 7. Little Ruſſia, or Red Ruſſia, including the palatinates of Chelm, Belz, and Lemburg; 8. Podolia, in which are included the palatinates of Podolia and Braclaw; 9. Palatinate of Kiov; 10. Volhynia. Beſides theſe, Lithuania has been conſidered a part of Poland; as likewiſe Samogitia and Courland. Of theſe, Great Poland, Poliſh Pruſſia, and part of Lithuania, have been ſeized by Pruſſia. Little Poland and Red Ruſſia were annexed to Auſtria: while the remainder and greater part of Lithuania, Courland, Poleſia, Podolia, palatinate of Kiov and Volhynia, were ſeized by Ruſſia; ſo that, in the year 1793, only Samogitia, Maſovia, and Podlachia, were left to conſtitute the kingdom of Poland. The air is ſomething cold, but ſalubrious; and the country is, for the moſt part, level, and has but few hills. On the Krapack mountains, which ſeparate Poland from Hungary, the air is very cold, for it ſnows there frequently in the midſt of ſummer, and, in ſome parts of them, the ſnow never melts. The ſoil of this country is exceedingly fertile, and yields plenty of grain, of which there cannot be a greater proof than that near 4000 veſſels and floats, moſt of which are laden with corn, annually paſs down the Viſtula to Dantzick. In Podolia, Volhynia, the Ukraine, and the province of Ruſſia, corn grows in vaſt plenty, and with little culture or manure. In Great and Little Poland, agriculture requires more attention and labour; but the harveſts make ample amends for the pains of the induſtrious peaſant. The ſoil of Lithuania is as fruitful as that of Podolia; and Samogitia produces abundance of grain, beſides hemp and flax. Poliſh Pruſſia is alſo a very fertile country: here are likewiſe excellent paſtures. The following is a remarkable inſtance of the fertility of the ſoil, and the plenty of all kinds of proviſions in this country: namely, that from the year 1701 to 1718, during which time there were ſeveral armies in Poland, there was not the leaſt ſcarcity of bread. Peat, oker of all kinds, chalk, belemnites, agate, chalcedony, cornelians, onyxes, opals, jaſper, fine rock cryſtal, amethyſts, granite, topazes, ſapphires, and even rubies and diamonds are found in Poland. This country likewiſe affords marienglas, or Muſcovy glaſs, talc, alum, ſaltpetre, amber, pit-coal, and an inexhauſtible quantity of ſalt, which is hewn out of the rock in large blocks, and ſalt-ſprings; alſo ſpar, quickſilver, lapis calaminaris, iron, lead, a ſmall quantity of tin, gold, and ſilver; but there are no mines of the two laſt metals wrought in Poland. The Poliſh manna is produced by an herb that grows in the meadows and fenny grounds; and it is gathered, in great quantities, from the twentieth of June to the end of July. The Poliſh kermes-berries are always gathered in May, before they are quite ripe; for, in the month of July, they ſwarm with inſects, which leave a kind of protuberance behind them; ſo that the berries are rendered unfit either for dying or medicine. Here are ſeveral woods of oak, beech, pine, and fir-trees: Poland alſo yields abundance of honey and wax. Horned cattle are bred in this country in ſuch numbers, that 80,000 or 90,000 oxen are driven every year out of Poland. The Poliſh horſes are very ſtrong, ſwift, and beautiful. Of theſe there are great numbers in this country, and likewiſe of wild beaſts: as the elk, called in the Poliſh language, los, or a wild ram with one horn; the biſon, called zubr by the Poles; the hyena, in the Poliſh language called roſomak; the ſuhak, which reſembles a wild goat; and laſtly, the aurracks are very common in Poland. The Poles, when conſidered as members of the community, are either nobles, citizens (in which claſs merchants, artiſts, and mechanics are included) or peaſants, who are moſtly vaſſals to the nobles. The Poliſh towns are for the moſt part built with wood; and the villages conſiſt of mean cottages, or huts. The nobles of Poland have, from time immemorial, reſided in the country. Every nobleman lives in his own village, ſeat, or caſtle; manages his eſtate by his vaſſals, or hired ſervants; and maintains himſelf and whole family by agriculture, breeding of bees, grazing, and hunting. Some of the nobility alſo ſpend part of their time in the cities or towns. A nobleman in the Poliſh language, is called Szlakcic, and the dignity is termed Shlakelſtwo. There are among the Poliſh nobility certain gentes, or tribes, and theſe again are divided into diſtinct families; this diſtinction, however, is not owing to the different places or provinces where they live, but they are ranked according to the names and arms they bear. Though Poland has its princes, counts, and barons, yet the whole nobleſſe are naturally on a level, excepting the difference ariſing from the poſts ſome of them enjoy: hence all thoſe who are of noble birth call one another brothers. However, noblemen whoſe circumſtances are low, ſubmit to enter into the ſervice of the richer ſort, eſpecially if the latter are in any eminent poſts, either for a comfortable ſubſiſtence, or to learn politeneſs and addreſs, and, perhaps, to raiſe their fortunes; and this is accounted no diſgrace. The Poliſh nobility enjoy a great many conſiderable privileges; and, indeed, the ſo much boaſted Poliſh liberty is properly limited to the nobles only; for they have the power of life and death over their vaſſals, who, on that account, groan under an oppreſſive vaſſalage, or rather ſlavery. Every nobleman is abſolute lord of his eſtates; ſo that the king can require no ſubſidy from him, nor is he obliged to maintain, or find quarter for any ſoldiers. If a foreigner dies on a nobleman's eſtate in Poland, without leaving any heirs, his effects fall to the lord of the manor, as an eſcheat; but on the demiſe of a nobleman without heirs, his eſtate does not eſcheat to the king, whilſt there are any perſons living who are related, in the eighth degree, to the deceaſed; and, if a nobleman dies without heirs, or any ſuch relations, the king cannot appropriate his eſtate to himſelf, but is obliged to beſtow it on ſome other nobleman of merit: The houſe of a nobleman is a ſecure aſylum for perſons who have committed any crime; for none muſt preſume to take them from thence by force. The judges in the town dare not cauſe a nobleman's vaſſal to be arreſted, or his effects to be ſeized. Noblemen and their vaſſals pay no toll, or duty, for the cattle, corn, &c. which they ſend out of the kingdom for ſale: they have alſo the liberty of working any mines or ſalt-works on their own eſtates. No magiſtrate, nor even the king himſelf, can cauſe a nobleman to be arreſted, without ſignifying the crime he is guilty of, and a previous citation; unleſs he be a robber, and have been three times impeached by his aſſociates; or be ſurpriſed in any other crime, ipſo facto; or laſtly, when he cannot, or will not, put in bail. A nobleman is ſubject to none but the king; however, he is not obliged to appear before his majeſty out of the kingdom, when cited on any cauſe, unleſs it relates to the royal treaſury, but muſt be judged in Poland. All eccleſiaſtical dignities, and civil poſts, in this kingdom, are to be held only by the nobility. None but noblemen are qualified to be proprietors of eſtates, except the burghers of the cities of Thorn, Cracow, Wilna, Lemberg, and Lublin, who have the privilege of purchaſing lands. Any nobleman may purchaſe a houſe, and live in a city, or town: but he muſt then ſubmit to ſerve municipal offices; and, if he is concerned in trade, or commerce, he forfeits the privileges of a noble Pole. Every nobleman has a vote in the election of a king: and is even qualified to wear the crown, if he be raiſed to it by the free choice of the reſt of the nobility. The Poliſh nobility has alſo ſome excluſive advantages in purchaſing ſalt: theſe, and other important privileges, the nobles of Poland enjoy, partly by the indulgence of their kings, and partly by ancient cuſtom or preſcription. A perſon deſcended from noble anceſtors is much more honoured than one that is newly ennobled. All civil cauſes relating to the nobility are tried in the provincial courts of judicature; but if a nobleman commence a ſuit with the farmers of the royal demeſnes, a commiſſorial court is appointed to terminate the diſpute. The Poliſh burghers alſo enjoy ſome valuable privileges. The Poliſh language is derived from the old Sclavonic; however, it differs extremely from all the other languages which come from the ſame ſource. The German language is very much in vogue in Poland. The Latin tongue is alſo commonly ſpoken in Poland, even by the lower claſs of people, but without any regard to accent, quantity, or purity of language. There are no manufactures in Poland; but all the commodities of the country are exported, unwrought, out of the kingdom. The Poles, indeed, export grain of all kinds, flax, hemp, linſeed, hops, honey, wax, tallow, hides, leather (dreſſed in the Ruſſian manner) pitch, pot-aſh, maſts, deal-boards, ſhip and houſe timber, horned cattle, horſes, and other home commodities; but theſe are greatly over-balanced by the imports, namely, wine (that of Hungary alone carrying ſome millions annually out of the kingdom), ſpices, cloths, ſilk ſtuffs, fine linen, pearls, precious ſtones, plate copper, braſs, ſteel, furs, &c. As for the religion profeſſed in this country, it was decreed by the conſtitutions of the Pacification Diet, held in the year 1736, that no perſon ſhould be elected king of Poland, and great duke of Lithuania, without firſt making a ſolemn profeſſion of the Roman Catholic religion; and that the queen muſt either have been brought up in that community, or publicly declare herſelf a member of it: hence it appears that the Roman Catholic is the eſtabliſhed religion. The diſſidents, i. e. the Lutherans, Calviniſts, and Greeks, by the treaties concluded with the ancient confederations, and particularly the conſtitution of the year 1717, are promiſed ſecurity as to their effects, and an equality with the other ſubjects as to their perſons; and, for this end, ſeveral other powers intereſted themſelves in their behalf. This procured them many fair promiſes; which, however, were not fulfilled. The Jews are indulged with great privileges, and are very numerous in Poland: hence this country is ſtyled the paradiſe of the Jews. It is ſuppoſed that there are, at leaſt, two millions of Jews only in the villages; and here it muſt be obſerved that there are, at leaſt, 1, 2, or 3 Jewiſh families in every village, excluſive of the great number of Jews in the towns. Their annual capitation, or poll-tax, amounts to 220,000 Poliſh guilders in the kingdom of Poland, and 120,000 in Lithuania, which makes, in the whole, the ſum of 56,666 rixdollars; and this over and above the general impoſts and taxes. All the writers who have treated of the ancient hiſtory of Poland, are of opinion, that the preſent inhabitants were not the original poſſeſſors of this country, but emigrated hither as colonies from other parts; it is alſo the general opinion, that they came from Sarmatia, and ſettled on the banks of the Viſtula. Poland was formerly an hereditary kingdom; but afterwards, the acceſſion of a new king to the government was always preceded by a declaration of the nobility; however, the kings did not only ſtyle themſelves ſovereigns of Poland by the conſent of the people, but alſo heirs to the kingdom, and its dependencies, by right of ſucceſſion. Sigiſmund Auguſtus was the laſt who aſſumed this title. After his deceaſe, it was enacted by a law, that no king ſhould, in his life-time, appoint or chooſe a ſucceſſor; nor convoke a diet for the election; nor, laſtly, in any manner intermeddle with the ſucceſſion to the crown: but that, on the deceaſe of a king, the choice ſhould perpetually remain free and open to all the nobles of the kingdom; this law has, accordingly, been hitherto obſerved: thus Poland became an elective kingdom. The place of election is in a common, or open field, near the village of Wola, not far from Warſaw. The ſovereign is elected by the ſpiritual and temporal counſellors of ſtate; the nobles, who ſend their repreſentatives, or proxies, though every nobleman may attend in perſon if he pleaſes; by the cities of Cracow, Poſnan, Vilna, Lemberg, and Warſaw, whoſe choice always coincides with that of the nobility; and likewiſe by Thorn, Elbing, and Dantzic, the three principal cities of Poliſh Pruſſia: none but Roman Catholics dare appear at the election. The king elect is obliged, either perſonally, or by his ambaſſador or proxy, to ſwear to the obſervance of the Pacta Conventa, which are drawn up in the Poliſh language, and adminiſtered by the ſtates; after this he is proclaimed king, and crowned in the cathedral of Cracow, by the archbiſhop of Gneſna. Poland, in conjunction with the great duchy, which is annexed to it, conſtitutes a republic, of which, indeed, the king is conſidered as the head, but moſt of the power is lodged in the ſenate, or council of ſtate, and the nobleſſe. The king is not permitted to enter into a war, to aſſemble an army, to conclude a peace, or to make any public alliances; neither is he inveſted with the power of ſending envoys on important occaſions, impoſing taxes, contributions, or cuſtoms, or of coining money, without the conſent of the ſtates; he is to make no laws, determine no religious diſputes, nor to alienate any of the royal demeſnes; nor, laſtly, is he to undertake, and carry into execution, any matters of importance that concern the kingdom, without the conſent of the ſtates duly convened. Among his royal prerogatives, the chief is, that the king has the diſpoſal of the poſts of honour, and the royal demeſnes; but, without the conſent of the ſtates, he is neither to diminiſh, or increaſe, the honorary poſts, nor to confer above one office on one perſon, nor to deprive any one of his poſt. The king of Poland has little or no property in what is called the royal eſtates, but is obliged to beſtow them on private perſons; and the conſideration-money does not come into the king's coffers, but is applied to the ſervice of the republic. The other royal prerogatives are as follows: the chief care of the public welfare is committed to the king, who is to conſult with the ſtates about every thing. The Poliſh ſenate, or council of ſtate, conſiſts of 144 members, who are all ſtyled ſenators of the kingdom, counſellors of ſtate, and have the title of excellency; however, they have no appointments or penſions as ſenators. The ſenate conſiſts of two archbiſhops, 15 biſhops, 37 woiewodas or palatines, including the three caſtellans and the ſtaroſta of Samogitia, who rank with the palatines. The office of a woiewoda, or palatine, is to march at the head of the nobility of his woiewodzwo, or palatinate, in time of war. Every palatine is a prince by his office. Eighty two caſtellani, or caſtellans, who in time of peace are only ſenators, without any juriſdiction; but in time of war, by general ſummons, they act as palatines, whoſe lieutenants they in ſome meaſure are, and march at the head of the nobility, under the woiewodas. The great caſtellans, together with the other ſpiritual and temporal ſenators, are admitted into the moſt ſecret councils, from which the others are ſometimes excluded; and, laſtly, the crown officers. The diets are uſually held on two accounts; namely, to conſider on the reſolutions of the ſenate relating to the public welfare, and for the adminiſtration of juſtice. No ſuch thing as a ſtanding army, kept in conſtant pay, was formerly known in this country; but all that were capable of bearing arms in the nation took the field on any emergency. In the year 1551, the Lithuanians firſt began, for the ſecurity of their frontiers, to keep on foot, and pay, a certain number of troops. Their example was followed by the Poles, who raiſed an army to defend their frontiers from the ravages of their roving, lawleſs neighbours, who live on plunder. The fourth part of the produce of the royal table lands, as they are called, are appropriated to maintain theſe troops; hence they are called quartians, and the money appointed for the payment of them is depoſited in the caſtle of Rawa. But as theſe quartians were found not to be ſufficient for the defence of the kingdom, the army was augmented, and divided into cavalry and infantry; but the former was more numerous than the foot. The troops are now divided into the crown army, and that of Lithuania; but ſome of the troops i both armies are clothed and exerciſed in the Poliſh, and others in the German manner. Beſides this ſtanding army, which receives conſtant pay, Poland, on any preſſing exigency, is provided with another, which can be ſpeedily got together, and is of no charge to the public. For on any ſudden and imminent danger, the whole body of the nobility are ſummoned to appear in the field on horſe-back; and ſuch a general ſummons of the nobles is, in the Poliſh language, called Poſpolite Ruſzenie. This is concluded upon in a diet, after having been previouſly propoſed in the provincial meetings: and is done by royal letters, with the ſeals of the kingdom and the great duchy of Lithuania. Theſe being faſtened to poles by the ſummoners, are carried to the principal noblemen, ſtate-officers, and perſons of rank, in every palatinate, and read in the market-places of the cities and towns. When this has been three times repeated, the nobility, after holding their aſſemblies in their palatinates and diſtricts, appear in the field on horſeback. The univerſities of Poland are, Cracow, Wilna, and Poſen. The Proteſtants and Greeks, under the name of diſſidents, were deprived of many of their privileges by the Roman Catholics, contrary to the treaty of Oliva; and notwithſtanding the remonſtrances of the courts of London, Peterſburgh, Berlin, and Copenhagen, a diet aſſembled in the year 1766, did not ſeem inclined to reſtore them, or repeal ſome of the exceptionable laws. Such was the ſituation of the diſſidents at the election of Staniſlaus, in the year 1764, and was the occaſion of great diſturbances, and almoſt a civil war, and was the occaſion of introducing troops of Ruſſia, Pruſſia, and Auſtria. The partition of Poland was firſt projected by the king of Pruſſia. Poliſh, or Weſtern Pruſſia, had long been an object of his ambition: excluſive of its fertility, commerce, and population, its local ſituation rendered it highly valuable to that monarch; it lay between his German dominions and Eaſtern Pruſſia, and while poſſeſſed by the Poles, cut off, at their will, all communication between them. During the courſe of the laſt general war, he experienced the moſt fatal effects from this disjointed ſtate of his territories. By the acquiſition of Weſtern Pruſſia, his dominions would be rendered compact, and his troops, in time of war, be able to march from Berlin to Konigſberg, without interruption. The period was now arrived, when the ſituation of Poland ſeemed to promiſe the attainment of this favourite object; and by political management, brought over Ruſſia and Auſtria to his ſcheme. By the firſt diſmemberment, in the year 1772, the portion taken by Ruſſia was the largeſt, the Auſtrian the moſt populous, and the Pruſſian the moſt commercial. The population of the whole amounts to near 5,000,000 of ſouls; the firſt containing 1,500,000, the ſecond 2,500,000, and third 860,000. Weſtern Pruſſia was the greateſt loſs to Poland, as by the diſmemberment of that province, the navigation of the Viſtula entirely depends upon the king of Pruſſia: by the loſs, conſequently, of this diſtrict, a fatal blow was given to the trade of Poland; for his Pruſſian majeſty laid ſuch heavy duties upon the merchandize paſſing to Dantzic, as greatly to diminiſh the commerce of that town, and to transfer a conſiderable portion of it to Memmel and Konigſberg; and in the year 1793, the ſecond partition took place. Some attempts were made by a few patriotic noblemen, to deliver their country from their oppreſſors, and they were at firſt ſucceſsful, but the brave Koſciuſko being taken priſoner, and his army defeated, no farther efforts were made. Koſciuſko was carried into Ruſſia, and the king formally reſigned his crown at Grodno, in the year 1795. What is the preſent ſtate of Poland, or if any part yet remains undivided, is not come to the knowledge of the author.

POMERANIA, a country of Germany, bounded on the north by the Baltic, on the eaſt by Pomerelia, on the ſouth by Poland and the margraviate of Brandenburg, and on the weſt by the duchy of Mecklenburg. The country is level, with few hills. In ſome parts indeed the ſoil is ſandy, but in moſt pretty cloſe and good, ſo that the inhabitants have not only every year a ſufficiency of wheat, rye, barley, and oats, for home conſumption, but export great quantities. They likewiſe cultivate buckwheat, vetches, flax, and hemp. It produces alſo a ſufficiency of fruit. In ſeveral parts of the country are fine heaths and foreſts, and among the latter, divers of oak. The wood of theſe foreſts is uſed not only for fuel, and the building of houſes and veſſels, but ſerves alſo for making tar and charcoal. Many parts yield turf for fuel. Thoſe parts which do not anſwer for tillage, are made uſe of for grazing. Its geeſe are famous for their largeneſs, and in general the dried Pomeranian geeſe, hams, ſauſages, and ſalmon paſs for the beſt in all Germany. The ſituation of this country on the Baltic, is very advantageous for trade and navigation; though the coaſt of Pomerania, eſpecially about the Oder, is very dangerous to veſſels, unleſs they have the good fortune of meeting with a haven, of which indeed there are ſeveral. The uſual payment of ſhoreage was aboliſhed by Bogiſlaf X.: but in 1743, confirmed again in Pruſſian Pomerania, namely, that after paying a reaſonable ſalvage, all ſtranded goods ſhould, without any expence or moleſtation, be delivered to the owner. Amber is found on the coaſts of Hither Pomerania, but not in ſuch quantities as on thoſe of Pruſſia. The whole duchy of Pomerania conſiſts of 68 towns, which are dividedinto immediate and mediate. The former of theſe are immediately under the ſupreme tribunals of the country, chooſe their own magiſtrates, and out of the three capital towns of every province, the governing burgo-maſters are appointed as ſtates of the country, and ſit in the diets thereof. On the other hand, the mediate cities are under the king's agents, or noblemen; take the oath of fidelity and allegiance to their lords and patrons; attend their courts, and have the proceſſes of townſmen on appeal, moved from their magiſtracy to the courts of thoſe agents or nobleſſe under whom they are. Their magiſtrates are likewiſe appointed by their lords, and confirmed by the regency. The greateſt part of the inhabitants, ſince the years 1534 and 1535, in which the reformation took place, have profeſſed Lutheraniſm, though in ſome parts there are Calviniſts and Catholics. Theſe parts were anciently inhabited by the Suevi and Vandals, under whom were comprehended the Goths, the Rugi, the Lemovi, and other nations. Theſe quitting it about the middle of the ſixth century, the Slavi or Wendi entered the country, and meeting with an amicable reception, ſettled there in great numbers, diffuſing themſelves all over the country. The firſt record in which the name of Pomerania occurs, is a bull of pope Innocent, bearing date in the year 1140, for the confirmation of the newly erected biſhopric of Pomerania. This appellation, in all appearance, is of Sclavonic etymology, being compounded of the words Po, Marſki, that is, on, or near, the ſea, and in proceſs of time was extended to the country on the weſt ſide of the Oder. Pomerania is divided by the Oder into the Anterior, or Hither Pomerania, and Hinder, or Farther Pomerania; the former on the weſt, the latter on the eaſt ſide of that river. The duchy of Pomerania was founded by prince Suantibor, in the year 1107, who at his death divided his poſſeſſions amongſt his four ſons. As this family became extinct, the eſtates were taken poſſeſſion of by Brandenburg and Poland; and in the year 1537, by the death of the laſt duke, Boleſlaus XIV. Sweden became poſſeſſed of a part which had been already obtained by conqueſt. By the treaty of Weſtphalia, the Swedes were left in poſſeſſion of Anterior Pomerania, with the principality of Rugen, the town of Stettin, the iſland of Wollin, the Oder, Friſch Haff, &c.; but after an unfortunate war, the principal part was ceded to Pruſſia, ſo that the Peene is the boundary of Swediſh Pomerania. In the college of princes, two votes are given at the diet for Pomerania, one in the name of the king of Sweden, as duke of Anterior Pomerania; the other in the name of the king of Pruſſia, as duke of Hinder Pomerania; and the like takes place in Upper Saxony. The crown of Sweden is aſſeſſed in the ſum of one hundred and twenty-three rix-dollars twelve kruitzers and two-thirds to the chamber at Wetzlar; and Brandenburg, or Pruſſia, pays towards it the ſum of two hundred and ſeventy-two rix-dollars forty-nine kruitzers and a half.

POMERELIA, a country bounded on the north by the Baltic, on the eaſt by Pruſſia, on the ſouth by Poland, and on the weſt by Pomerania; about 90 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. This country was formerly a part of the duchy of Pomerania, and was governed by its own princes, of the Pomeranian line. The laſt of theſe, who was called Meſtowyn, dying without children, in the year 1295, left his dominions to Premiſlaus II. prince of Great Poland. But the marggrave of Brandenburg attacked this country, aſſiſted by the knights of the Teutonic Order, who afterwards united it to their dominions, and kept poſſeſſion of it from the year 1310 to 1466. After this it fell under the dominion of Poland. It has lately been annexed to the dominions of Pruſſia. The principal places are Dantzic and Stargard.

PONDA, a town of Hindooſtan, in the county of Soonda: 12 mile SE. Goa, and 20 N. Carwar.

PONDICHERRY, a town of Hindooſtan, on the coaſt of Coromandel, in the Carnatic, firſt ſettled by the French. In the year 1693, it was taken by the Dutch, but reſtored not long after. The Dutch were no ſooner in poſſeſſion of the place, than they raiſed new walls, erected ſeven regular baſtions, and whatever elſe was neceſſary to render it one of the moſt complete fortreſſes in the Indies, on account of its excellent ſituation. In 1696, upon the concluſion of a general peace, the place wa reſtored to the French, who thereby acquired the property of Pondicherry and all thoſe fine new fortifications, for ſo trifling a ſum as five thouſand pounds, which they paid to the Dutch governor, upon his delivering u all that he poſſeſſed. After which Pondicherry became the chief ſeat an capital reſidence of the French Eaſt India Company. The houſes of th town are regularly laid out, as if it had been all built at once; it is no near four leagues in extent. The Europeans build with bricks; but th Indians, and other nations, uſe only wood, in that manner which we ca lath and plaſter: theſe houſes are only one ſtory high, and are uſuall eight yards in front, and ſix in depth, and very indifferently lighted Their roofs are all flat, for the conveniency of lying upon them, whic they do, almoſt naked, agreeably to the cuſtom of the country; for Pon dicherry lying in the torrid zone, is extremely hot, though the climate found, by experience, to be very wholeſome. It never rains, except ſeve or eight days at moſt, towards the end of October. The native Indians or as they are called here, Gentiles, or Gentoos, are moſt of them weave or painters; and though the beſt workmen cannot earn above two-pence day, yet upon this he is able to ſubſiſt himſelf, his wife, and his children their principal food being rice, boiled in water, or wrought up into paſte, and baked upon the coals. The adjacent country is extremely we cultivated, and produces rice in abundance; ſo that there is hardly a plac in the Indies of greater plenty, or where they have fleſh, fiſh, and fow on more reaſonable terms. One diſadvantage it has, and that too ver conſiderable, which is, the want of a port; for there is only a road befo Pondicherry, and that none of the beſt, the flux and reflux of the ſea is no above a foot or two at the moſt, the landing very difficult and troubleſom ſhips not being able to come within a leſs diſtance than half a league o the place. It was taken by the Engliſh, in the year 1761, when the fo tifications were deſtroyed. In the year 1763, it was reſtored to th French, by the peace of Verſailles, after which orders were given to repa the fortifications. POOL, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Dorſet, ſituat on a large bay, called Luxford Lake, or Pool Harbour, which, including a its angles, is fifty miles in circumference. Pool is a place of great trade and the merchants ſend out a great many veſſels to the Baltic, Portugal Newfoundland, America, Greenland, Newcaſtle, &c. Near the mouth o the harbour is an oyſter bank, and a number of ſmall veſſels are employe during the ſeaſon, in conveying them to the fattening beds in the creeks o Eſſex and Kent. This place in the laſt age, from a ſedge plat and a fe fiſhing-huts, aroſe to be a populous town, very rich, and adorned wit handſome buildings. Henry VI. by act of Parliament, granted to it th privileges he had taken from Melcombe, and gave the mayor leave to incloſe it with walls, which were begun next the harbour, by Richard III During the time of the civil wars of the laſt century, Pool was garriſone for the parliament. Pool was erected into a county of itſelf, by charter o queen Elizabeth, and is governed by a mayor, aldermen, &c. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. The harbour is allowed to be one of the beſt and ſafeſt in the whole channel for merchant-ſhips to lie in, as the ground is every where ſoft, and water alway ſufficient at ſpring-tides, for veſſels of ſixteen feet draught of water t come up to the quay; and there are very good anchoring-grounds in Swanage Bay, and likewiſe in the Bay of Studland, juſt without the harbour as alſo oppoſite Brownſea Caſtle, at the entrance of the harbour. Ther are belonging to this port 230 ſail of ſhipping, burthen 21,301 tons, an employing about 1500 men; about 140 ſhips are employed in the foreig trade, and the remainder in coaſting and fiſhing. POPAYAN, a province of South America, in the government o Terra Firma, bounded on the north by Terra Firma, and the provin of Carthagena, on the eaſt by New Grenada, on the ſouth by Quito, an on the weſt by the Pacific Ocean, extending from north to ſouth abou one hundred and ten leagues, and from 24 to 80 from eaſt to we The temperature of this country varies greatly, according as the place are ſituated in the plains, or on the ſides of the mountains; ſome bein rather cold than hot, others the reverſe, while others enjoy throughout th year a perpetual ſpring, particularly Popayan, the capital. The ſame m be ſaid of the ſoil, which produces in great abundance the grains and frui proper to its ſituation: the farmers breed great numbers of cattle a ſheep, ſome of which they ſell in the towns, and drive others to Quit where they are ſure of a good market. The juriſdiction of Popayan more ſubject to tempeſts of thunder and lightning than any of t known parts of America; frequent damages are done by theſe ſtorm nor are earthquakes unfrequent, and ſuppoſed to proceed from the gr number of mines. In ſeveral of the vallies of this juriſdiction is a r markable inſect, particularly famous for the power of the ſmall quantity venom it contains; it reſembles a ſpider, but is leſs than a bug, and by ſome called coya, by others cayba. It is of a fiery red colour, and, like ſpiders, is frequently found in the corners of walls, and among the herbage. The venom of this ſmall creature is of ſuch malignity, that on ſqueezing the inſect, if any happen to fall on the ſkin either of man or beaſt, it immediately penetrates into the fleſh, cauſing large tumours, which are ſoon ſucceeded by death. The only remedy hitherto known, is on the firſt appearance of a tumour to ſinge the party all over the body, with flames of ſtraw or long graſs growing in theſe plains. In order to this, the Indians of the country lay hold of the patient, ſome by the feet, and others by the hands, and with great dexterity perform the operation, after which the perſon is reckoned to be out of danger. Among the ſeveral plants of this juriſdiction, is that called by the natives cuca or coca; an herb ſo eſteemed by the Indians, that they will part with any kind of proviſions, the moſt valuable metals, gems, or any thing elſe, rather than want it. It is ſo nutritive and invigorating, that the Indians will labour whole days without any other proviſions. Great quantities of it are carried to the mine-towns, and uſed by the Indians, who otherwiſe would not be able to perform their work. Popayan, is one of the beſt trading countries in the government of Terra Firma, large quantities of Spaniſh goods being ſent thither from Carthagena, when the galleons arrive there. But beſides this tranſitory commerce, as it may be called, it has alſo another, reciprocal between it and Quito, to which it ſends horned cattle and mules, and receives in return cloths and baize. Its active commerce conſiſts in dried beef, ſalted pork, roll-tobacco, hogs lard, rum, cotton, ribbons, and other ſmall wares. Sugar and ſnuff are fetched from Santa Fé, and ſent to Quito. Here is alſo another traffic, which conſiſts in bartering ſilver for gold, there being abundance of the latter and very little of the former.

POPAYAN, a city of South America, and capital of the province of the ſame name, the ſee of a biſhop, and one of the moſt ancient cities in theſe parts. It ſtands in a large plain, having on the north ſide an uninterrupted proſpect of the country; on the eaſt is a mountain of a middling height called M, from its reſembling that letter. The houſes are all built of unburnt bricks, having ſpacious and well contrived apartments; and many of them a balcony towards the ſtreet, but the doors and windows very low and narrow; all the houſes of note have one ſtory, but the others only a ground-floor. The church was erected into a cathedral, in the year 1547, and is the only parochial church in the city. There are ſeveral convents, and an univerſity. The inhabitants of Popayan conſiſt of Spaniards; caſts reſulting from the marriage of the Whites and Negroes; Indians, and Mulattoes: but the greateſt part are of the negro caſt, owing to the multitude of negroe ſlaves kept as labourers in the mines and the plantations in the country, and to do the moſt ſervile works in the city; while the number of Indians is very ſmall. The inhabitants of Popayan are computed at about 25,000, among whom are many Spaniſh families; particularly ſixty, known to have been deſcended from very noble families in Spain. Popayan is the conſtant reſidence of the governor, whoſe office being purely civil, there is no neceſſity for his being acquainted with military affairs. Within the limits of his government all matters civil, political, and military, are under his direction, he is alſo the chief magiſtrate of the city; the others are the two ordinary alcades, choſen annually, and a proper number of regidores; the conſtitution being the ſame as in the cities: 190 miles N. PORT PASQUET, a harbour on the ſouth-weſt ſide of the iſland of Majorca.

PORT PATRICK, a ſmall ſea-port town of Scotland, on the ſouth-weſt coaſt of the county of Wigton, the neareſt harbour of Great Britain to Ireland, being not more than 20 miles to Donaghadee. Formerly the harbour was a mere inlet between two ridges of rocks, which advanced into the ſea, and only fit for flat-bottomed boats. There is now one of the fineſt quays in Britain, with a reflecting light-houſe; and, inſtead of a few flat-bottomed boats, above a dozen trading veſſels, of from 40 to 60 tons, which ſail and return regularly; beſides a number of veſſels which occaſionally come from other ports. The larger veſſels are navigated at an average by ſix men each. The light-houſe is particularly uſeful, and as there has long been another light-houſe on the Iriſh ſide, it renders the paſſage, even in the darkeſt night, convenient and comfortable, like a ſtreet well-lighted on both ſides. The ſea riſes conſiderably along this coaſt. At low water you can walk round the point of the pier, which at high water is from ten to fifteen feet deep at the entrance. This being the narroweſt part of the channel, has naturally the effect of accumulating the fluid upon the ſhores, when there is a ſwell from a ſtorm. What is farther deſerving of remark is, that at Donaghadee, which is almoſt directly oppoſite, the ſea ebbs and flows near an hour ſooner than at Port Patrick. There are now four elegant veſſels, fitted up with every accommodation, whoſe only object is to forward the mail, and to convey travellers from one iſland to the other. Both their exports and imports have greatly increaſed. The principal exports are goods from Paiſley, Mancheſter, &c.; and they import conſiderable quantities of the Iriſh linen manufacture. It appears from an enumeration recently made, that there are in the country part of the pariſh, 484, and in the town 512 ſouls, ſo that the whole population amounts to 996: 5 miles SW. Stanrawer. Long. 5. 3. W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 50. N.

PORT AU PRINCE, a ſea-port town of the iſland of Hiſpaniola, ſituated on the weſt coaſt. The country in the environs produces cotton, indigo, ſugar, and coffee. In the year 1770, great part of the town was deſtroyed by an earthquake. In the year 1794, it was taken by the Engliſh. Long. 72. 10. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 40. N.

PORT RESOLUTION, a harbour on the north ſide of the moſt eaſterly point of the iſland of Tanna, one of the New Hebrides, in the South Pacific Ocean, diſcovered by captain Cook, in the year 1774. It is no more than a little creek, running in ſouth-by-weſt half-weſt, three quarters of a mile, and is about half that in breadth. A ſhoal of ſand and rocks, lying on the eaſt ſide, makes it ſtill narrower. The depth of water in the harbour is from ſix to three fathoms, and the bottom is ſand and mud. No place can be more convenient for taking in wood and water, for both are cloſe to the ſhore. The water ſtunk a little after it had been a few days on board, but it afterwards turned ſweet; and even when it was at the worſt, the tin machine would, in a few hours, recover a whole caſk. This is an excellent contrivance for ſweetening water at ſea, and is well known in the navy. Long. 169. 45. E. Greenwich. Lat. 19. 32. S.

PORT ROSEWAY, a bay on the ſouth-eaſt of Nova Scotia. Long. 65. 15. W. Greenwich. Lat. 43. 40. N.

PORT ROYAL, or Porto Eſcondedo, a ſmall iſland and harbour in the bay of Campeachy, near the coaſt of Yucatan. Long. 74. 50. W. Ferro. Lat. 18. 22. N.

PORT ROYAL, a ſeaport of the iſland of Jamaica, ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the iſland, on a narrow neck of land, in which a thouſand ſail of ſhips could anchor with the greateſt convenience and ſafety; and the water was ſo deep at the quay of Port Royal, that veſſels of the greateſt burthen could lay their broadſides to the wharfs, and load or unload with but little trouble and at a ſmall expence. It contained 2000 houſes very handſomely built, and few places in the world could be compared to this town for trade, wealth, and an entire corruption of manners.

this flouriſhing ſtate it continued till the 9th of June 1692, when a dreadful earthquake, which ſeemed to ſhake the very foundations of the iſland, overwhelmed Port Royal, and buried nine-tenths of it eight fathoms under water. They, however, rebuilt the town after this deſtructive ſhock; but about ten years after, it was laid in aſhes by a terrible fire. Notwithſtanding this ſecond cataſtrophe, the extraordinary convenience of the harbour tempted them to rebuild it again. But in the year 1722, one of the moſt dreadful hurricanes ever known, reduced it a third time to a heap of rubbiſh. Warned by theſe extraordinary calamities, which ſeemed to mark out this place as a ſpot devoted to deſtruction, the cuſtom-houſe and public offices were removed, by an act of the aſſembly, and no market ſuffered to be held here for the future. It contains at preſent about 200 houſes, a navy yard, an hoſpital, and barracks for a company of ſoldiers: the fortifications are kept in repair: 20 miles SW. Kingſton. Long. 77. W. Greenwich. Lat. 17. 50. N.

PORTLAND (Iſland of), or rather a peninſula of England, on the coaſt of Dorſetſhire, in the Engliſh Channel, joined to the continent by what is called the Cheſil Bank, which has a heap of pebbles thrown up by the ſea, which reaches from Abbotſbury to Portland. This iſland, in the decline of the Saxon empire (for it is not mentioned by hiſtorians before that time) felt the ravages of the Danes more than any other place. At the end of the Daniſh war, it became part of the poſſeſſions of the church of Wincheſter. It is ſcarce ſeven miles round, and is encompaſſed with a ridge of high rocks, but is lower in the middle parts, here and there inhabited, producing plenty of corn, and good paſture for ſheep, but ſo barren of wood, that the poorer inhabitants uſe cow-dung dried in the ſun for firing. Portland continued in the church of Wincheſter, till the tenth year of Edward I. when Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, had it in exchange. The quarries at the weſt end of the iſland, afford excellent ſtone, firſt brought into repute in the reign of James I. Near the light-houſes is a remarkable cavern, from which the water riſes up like a fountain, and ſmall boats ſhelter themſelves in it. Portland Race is a dangerous eddy of two tides in the calmeſt ſeaſons. Portland Bill, the ſouthern extremity of the iſland, is a noted place for ſeamen, and on it are fixed two light-houſes for the direction of ſhips. This bill is ſaid to be in Long. 2. 28. W. PORTO BELLO, or St. Philipe de Puerto Bello, a ſea-port town of America, in the province of Panama, ſituated on the north coaſt of the Iſthmus of Darien. Moſt of the houſes are built with wood. In ſome the firſt ſtory is of ſtone, and the remainder of wood. They are about 130 in number, but moſt of them remarkably ſpacious. The town is under the juriſdiction of a governor, with the title of lieutenant-general, as being ſuch under the preſident of Panama. The town conſiſts of one principal ſtreet, extending along the ſtrand, having ſeveral others croſſing it, and running from the declivity of the mountain to the ſhore; together with ſome lanes parallel to the principal ſtreet, where the ground will admit of it. It has two ſquares, one oppoſite to the cuſtom-houſe, which is a ſtone ſtructure, built on the quay; the other faces the great church, which is alſo of ſtone, large and decently ornamented, and ſerved by a vicar, and ſome other prieſts, who are natives of the country. Beſides the great church, there are alſo two convents. At the eaſt end of the town, in the road to Panama, is a quarter called Guinea, being the place where all the negroes of both ſexes, whether ſlaves or free, have their habitation. This quarter is greatly crowded, when the galleons are at Porto Bello, moſt of the inhabitants of the town retiring thither, for the ſake of letting their houſes. At the ſame time great numbers of mechanics who then flood hither from Panama, lodge in this quarter for cheapneſs. Porto Bello, which is but thinly inhabited, becomes, at the time when the galleons are there, one of the moſt populous places in the world. Its ſituation on the iſthmus, between the South and North Sea, the goodneſs of its harbour, and its ſmall diſtance from Panama, have given it the preference to all other places, for the rendezvous of the joint commerce of Spain and Peru, at its fair. As ſoon as advice arrives that the fleet from Peru have unloaded their merchandiſe at Panama, the galleons make the beſt of their way to Porto Bello, in order to avoid the many diſtempers which affect the ſeamen, and derive their ſource from idleneſs. The concourſe of people on this occaſion is ſuch, that the rent of lodgings is raiſed to an exceſſive height, the price of a middling chamber and a ſmall cloſet, during the fair, being often 1000 crowns; and thoſe of ſome larger houſes 4000, 5000, or 6000. The ſhips are no ſooner moored in the harbour, than the ſeamen erect in the ſquare, a large tent with ſails, where they depoſit the cargo, that the reſpective proprietors may find their goods by the marks which diſtinguiſh them. Theſe bales are drawn on ſledges by the crews of the ſeveral ſhips, and the money paid for their labour equally divided among them all. While the ſeamen and European traders are thus employed, the land is covered with droves of mules from Panama, each drove conſiſting of above 100, loaded with cheſts of gold and ſilver, on account of the merchants of Peru. The ſhips being unloaded, and the merchants of Peru, together with the preſident of Panama, arrived, the fair comes under deliberation; and for this purpoſe the deputies of the ſeveral parties repair on board the ſhips belonging to the commodore of the galleons, where, in preſence of that commander and the preſident of Panama, the former as patron of the Europeans, and the latter of the Peruvians, the prices of the ſeveral kinds of merchandiſe are ſettled, and the contracts ſigned and made public, that every one may by them regulate the ſale of his effects; and by this means all fraud is precluded. The purchaſes and ſales, as well as the exchange of money, are tranſacted by brokers from Spain and Peru. After this every merchant begins to diſpoſe of his own goods, the Spaniſh brokers embark their cheſts of money, and thoſe of Peru ſend away the goods they have purchaſed, by veſſels, up the river Chagre; and thus the fair of Porto Bello ends. The harbour of Porto Bello was diſcovered on the 2d of November, 1502, by Columbus, who was ſo charmed with its extent, depth, and ſecurity, that he called it Porto Bello, or the Fair Harbour. Its mouth, though three quarters of a mile broad, is well defended by Fort St. Philipe de Lodo Hierro, or Iron Caſtle, ſituated on the north point of the entrance; for the ſouth ſide being full of rocks, ſhips are obliged to keep in the middle, and conſequently within 660 yards of the caſtle, where there is from nine to fifteen fathoms water, and a bottom of clayey mud, mixed with chalk and ſand. On the ſouth ſide of the harbour, and about 200 yards from the town, is a large caſtle called St. Jago de la Gloria, having before it a ſmall point of land, projecting into the harbour, and on it is a ſmall fort, called St. Jerom, within 20 yards of the houſes. All theſe were demoliſhed by admiral Vernon, in the year 1739, with ſix ſhips only. The inclemency of the climate of Porto Bello is well known. The heat is exceſſive, being greatly augmented by the ſituation of the town, which is ſurrounded with high mountains, without any interval for the current of the winds, which would otherwiſe refreſh it. The trees on the mountains ſtand ſo thick, that they intercept the rays of the ſun, and conſequently prevent the earth under their branches from being dried; hence copious exhalations, which form large heavy clouds, and precipitate themſelves in violent torrents of rain; but theſe are no ſooner over, than the ſun breaks out afreſh, and ſhines with his former ſplendour; though before the activity of his rays has dried the ſurface of the ground, not covered by trees, the atmoſphere is again crowded with another collection of thick vapours, the ſun is again concealed, and another torrent of rain ſucceeds: in this manner it continues night and day, without any ſenſible diminution of the heat. Theſe torrents of rain, which, by their ſuddenneſs and impetuoſity, ſeem to threaten a ſecond deluge, are often accompanied with ſuch tempeſts of thunder and lightning, as muſt terrify the moſt intrepid; eſpecially as this dreadful noiſe is prolonged by repercuſſions from the caverns in the mountains, and augmented by the howlings and ſhrieks of the multitudes of monkeys of all kinds, inhabiting the adjacent foreſts. The continual inclemency of the ſeaſon, added to the fatigue of the ſeamen in unloading the ſhips, carrying the goods on ſhore in barges, and afterwards drawing them along on ſledges, cauſe a very profuſe perſpiration, and conſequently renders them weak and faint; while they, in order to recruit their ſpirits, have recourſe to brandy, of which there is on theſe occaſions, an incredible conſumption. The exceſſive labour, immoderate drinking, and the inclemency and unhealthfulneſs of the climate, muſt jointly injure the beſt conſtitutions, and produce theſe deleterious diſeaſes ſo common in this country. But it is not ſeamen alone who are ſubject to theſe diſeaſes; others, who are ſtrangers to the ſeas, and not concerned in the fatigues, are alſo attacked by them, which abundantly demonſtrates, that the cauſes of theſe diſeaſes have their riſe in the unhealthineſs of the climate, though the labour, and fatigue, and drinking to exceſs, tend to ſpread and inflame them: 60 miles N. PORTO CAVALLO, a ſeaport of South America, in the province of Venezuela, attacked by the Britiſh in the year 1743, without ſucceſs: 25 miles NE. Caraccas.

PORTO DE COMBOA, a town on the weſt coaſt of Portugal, in the province of Eſtramadura: half a league and NE. Peniche.

PORTO DOS CASTELLANOS, a ſea-port town of South America, on the iſland of St. Sebaſtian.

PORTO FARINA, a ſeaport of Africa, in the kingdom of Tunis, called by the natives Gar el Mailan, or The Cave of Salt. The harbour, eſpecially the inner part of it, is ſafe in all weathers, and opens into a navigable lake or pond, formed by the river Mejerdah, which runs through it into the ſea. Long. 10. 16. E. Greenwich. Lat. 36. 30. N.

PORTO FERRARO, or Porto Ferrajo, a ſeaport on the north coaſt of the iſland of Elba. Long. 28. 12. E. Ferro. Lat. 42. 53. N.—On the 6th of July, 1797, this port was taken poſſeſſion of by the Britiſh troops, after the evacuation of Leghorn.

PORTO FINO, a ſea-port town of Italy, in the ſtate of Genoa, ſituated between two mountains, and anciently called Portus Delphini: 15 miles E. Genoa.

PORTO GRECO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Capitanata, ſituated near the ſea coaſt: 9 miles S. Vieſta.

PORTO GRUARO, a town of Italy, in the country of Friuli, containing 3 churches, and 4 convents: 2 miles N. Concordia.

PORTO HERCOLE, a ſeaport of Italy, in the Stato de gli Præſidii, ſituated on a peninſula: 4 miles S. from Orbitello. Long. 28. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 42. 19. N.

PORTO LEGNANO, a town of Italy, in the Veroneſe, on the north-eaſt ſide of the Adige, oppoſite Legnano.—On the 13th of September, 1796, this town was taken by the French: the garriſon, containing 1673 men, ſurrendered priſoners of war.

PORTO LONGONE, a ſtrong ſeaport on the ſouth-eaſt coaſt of the iſland of Elba. In the year 1646, it was taken by the French, and retaken by the Spaniards in the year 1650: 2 miles SE. Porto Ferraro.

PORTO MAURIZIO, a ſea-port town of Italy, in the ſtate of Genoa, on a ſmall gulf which ſeparates it from Oneglia: 2 miles W. Oneglia.

PORTO NOVO, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Benin, principally in the poſſeſſion of the Portugueſe.

PORTO PRAIA, a town of St. Jago, one of the Cape Verd Iſlands, ſituated on a ſharp rock, on the eaſt ſide of the iſland: the harbour is good, and ſeldom deſtitute of a conſiderable number of ſhipping, unleſs the crown of Portugal happens to be at war with ſome other power. It has long been a place where the outward-bound Guinea and Indiamen have been accuſtomed to touch at for water and refreſhments, whether Engliſh, French, or Dutch, but few of them call on their return to Europe. The natives bring down to the ſhore the produce of the country for ſale, to the mariners and paſſengers; and the whole coaſt reſembles a fair, every place being filled with hogs, bullocks, fowls, goats, figs, plantanes, and cocoa-nuts, which they exchange for ſhirts, drawers, handkerchiefs, breeches, hats, waiſtcoats, and all manner of clothing. There is a fort on the ſummit of a hill that entirely commands the harbour; and were it properly mounted with cannon, and garriſoned, would be a place of great ſtrength. Long. 23. 51. W. Greenwich. Lat. 14. 53. 30. N.

PORTO RICO, an iſland in the Weſt Indies, ſituated twenty leagues to the eaſtward of Hiſpaniola, about 140 miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and 36 in breadth from north to ſouth. This iſland was diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus, in the year 1493, and was at that time ſuppoſed to contain 600,000 inhabitants, who underſtanding that the Spaniards had made themſelves maſters of Hiſpaniola, concluded that they were invincible and immortal. One of their petty princes, it ſeems, had ſome doubts with regard to this point, and queſtioned, though they came from the eaſt, whether they were really the children of the Sun, as they pretended to be. He communicated his doubts to the other caziques of the iſland, upon which about 200 Spaniards had landed; and it was agreed, that, before they reſigned their liberties, they ſhould make an experiment upon the immortality of their invaders; but, in the mean time, treat them with great complaiſance and hoſpitality. Salſedo, a domeſtic of Columbus, happened to be the unfortunate object of this experiment. As the behaviour of the ſavages had given the Spaniards no room to doubt of their ſubmiſſion, the latter careleſsly ſtrolled through the iſland. Salſedo, falling into the territory of Jaguaca, belonging to the cazique Vraican, was entertained in the moſt ſumptuous and humane manner; and, upon his departure, an eſcort of fifteen or twenty ſavages was appointed to attend him and to carry his baggage. When they came to the river Guarabo, in the eaſtern part of the iſland, the Indians deſired of Salſedo the honour to carry him over on their ſhoulders, which he very readily granted. Some of the ſtrongeſt of the ſavages accordingly took him up; but while they were in the deepeſt part of the river, they threw him into it, according to their inſtructions, and by keeping him down, ſoon put an end to his life. When he was dead, they dragged his body aſhore; and, under the firm perſuaſion that he was immortal, remained about it for three days, aſking pardon for what they had done, till the carcaſe began to putrify. Then they informed their cacique of what had happened; and he repaired to the ſpot, to examine the body, which, being then quite corrupted, convinced him, and the other caciques, that the Spaniards were mortal. Upon this conviction they took to their arms, and, almoſt in an inſtant, put 150 of them to death, while they were rapaciouſly plundering the natives of their gold. The reſt muſt have undergone the ſame fate, had not Diego Salazar arrived with a freſh reinforcement. This maſſacre gave the Spaniards a plauſible pretext for exterminating the natives; an aim, which, in a ſhort time they effected: but this inhumanity was far from anſwering their purpoſe; for the vaſt treaſures of the iſland diſappeared with the natives. This circumſtance ſeems to favour the report, that the Indians had the ſecret of diſcovering and working their mines, which ſecret periſhed with themſelves. Be this as it may, the iſland of Porto Rico was ſtill a moſt deſirable object, on account of its fertility and ſituation. The iſland itſelf is extremely fertile, and enjoys all the benefits of the moſt temperate climate It is beautifully diverſified with woods, hills, and vallies; and well watered with a variety of ſtreams that deſcend from the mountains. Its meadows are very rich; and the cattle, of which they feed great plenty, were originally imported from Old Spain. The north part of the iſland, which is the moſt barren, is ſaid to contain various mines of ſilver and gold; though it is confidently affirmed, that gold duſt is often found in the ſands of their rivers. Many ſugar-mills are built; and the iſland produces all the different fruits which are common in the Weſt Indies. The woods are ſtored with parrots, wild pigeons, and other fowl. European poultry is found here in plenty, and their coaſts afford abundance of fiſh. A breed of dogs, which the Spaniards brought over to America, for hunting and tearing in pieces the defenceleſs inhabitants, are ſaid to live here wild in the wood, near the ſea ſhore, and ſubſiſt upon land-crabs, that burrow in the earth. The principal trade of the natives conſiſts in their ſugar, ginger, hides, and cotton, both raw and manufactured, caſſia, maſtic, ſalt, oranges, lemons, and ſweetmeats. Long. 65. 30. to 67. 45. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. to 18. 35. N.

PORT-GLENONE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, 105 miles from Dublin. It is pleaſantly ſeated on the river Bann, over which there is a bridge at the end of the town, which unites the counties of Antrim and Derry.

PORTO-RICO, ſee St. Juan de Porto Rico.

PORTO-SANTO, a ſmall iſland in the Atlantic, diſcovered, moſt probably, about the ſame time as Madeira. The Portugueſe fleet fell in with this iſland by accident in a ſtorm, and gave it this name on account of the protection it afforded them. It was then uninhabited; but has ever ſince continued peopled by Portugueſe, and in their poſſeſſion. The iſland of Porto Santo is but ſmall, not much exceeding five leagues in compaſs. It has a good harbour, and only one bay, where ſhips may ride ſecurely againſt all winds, except the ſouth-weſt. It is in this bay, that ſhips going or returning from India, ſtop to refit and refreſh, which is all the trade the inhabitants enjoy. The iſland produces wheat and corn in abundance; alſo cows, wild-boars, and rabbits; the latter in incredible numbers. But its moſt valuable productions for export are dragon's-blood, honey, wax, and fiſh. Long. 2. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 32. 55. N.

PORTO SANTO, a ſeaport of South America, in Terra Firma, and province of Cumana.

PORTO SEGURO, a ſea-port town of South America, in Braſil, and ſaid to be the firſt place diſcovered in that country, in the juriſdiction of Bahia. The harbour is convenient and ſafe, with anchorage from ten to twenty fathoms, in a bay at the mouth of a river. Long. 23. W. Ferro. Lat. 16. 45. S.

PORTO VECCHIO, a ſea-port town of the iſland of Corſica, ſituated in a gulf on the eaſt coaſt, which forms a vaſt harbour, in the midſt of marſhes, which render the air unwholeſome. In the year 1553, it was taken by the French: 60 miles S. Baſtia. Long. 27. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 41. 37. N.

PORTA VENERO, or Porta di Venero, a town and ſeaport of Italy, in the ſtate of Genoa, at the entrance of the Gulf of Spezza: 5 miles S. Spezza.

PORTO VICO, a town of Italy, in the Breſſan: 18 miles SSW. Breſcia.

PORTOLA, a town of Iſtria: 10 miles S. Capo d'Iſtria.

PORTOZERO, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Olonetz; on the river Andoma, near the Onezſkoe Lake: 20 miles S. Pudoga.

PORTRETH, a ſmall bay of England, on the north-weſt coaſt of the county of Cornwall: 10 miles NW. from St. Ives.

PORTSEA ISLAND, an iſland of England, about 14 miles in circumference, between Portſmouth Harbour and Langſton Harbour, and ſeparated from the main land of Hampſhire, by a narrow channel, over which is a bridge. In this iſland are Portſmouth and Portſea.

PORTSEA, a town of England in the county of Hants, adjoining to Portſmouth, built on what was heretofore called Portſmouth Common, on condition that if the enemy ſhould land, the houſes were to be thrown down, without compenſation to the owners.

PORTSMOUTH, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Hants, ſituated on the iſland of Portſea. The town was anciently defended by a wall of timber, covered with earth; a baſtion to the north-eaſt, near the gate; and two forts of hewn-ſtone, at the mouth of the harbour, begun by Edward IV. and finiſhed by Henry VI. Queen Elizabeth, at great expence, fortified it with new works. King Charles II. after his reſtoration, directed great alterations, eſtabliſhed new docks and yards, raiſed ſeveral forts, and fortified them after the modern manner; which works were augmented in the reign of James the Second. Since that time it has received great additions from ſucceeding princes, ſo that it is, at preſent, the moſt regular fortreſs in Britain: and as it cannot be effectually attacked by ſea, may juſtly be deemed impregnable. This town was ſecured for the parliament in the late civil wars, till the reſtoration of Charles II. who was met here by Catharine, the infanta of Portugal, and here married to her. Within theſe few years, the government has bought ſtill more ground for additional works; and, no doubt, it may be made impregnable by land, as well as ſea, ſince a ſhallow water may be brought quite round it. All ſorts of military and naval ſtores are diſpoſed in the moſt exact order, ſo that the workmen can find what they want in the dark. The rope-houſe is near a quarter of a mile long. Some of the cables here require 100 men to work them; and their labour is ſo hard, that they can work at them but four hours a day. The leaſt number of men employed continually in the yard is ſaid to be 1000; the docks and yards, in ſhort, reſemble diſtinct towns, there being particular rows of dwellings, built at the public charge, for all the principal officers: and they are under a ſeparate government from the garriſon. Here is a fine quay for laying up the cannon; and the arſenal at Venice is not better diſpoſed. The town being low, and full of water and ditches, it is reckoned aguiſh; the ſtreets are not very clean, the place being in want of freſh water; yet the continual reſort of ſeamen and ſoldiers to it, the men of war being often paid here, renders it always full of people: here is a deputy-governor and garriſon. The mouth of the harbour, which is not ſo broad as the Thames at Weſtminſter, is ſecured on Goſport ſide by four forts, beſides a platform of above twenty cannon, level with the water; and on the other ſide by South Sea caſtle; but that caſtle, whilſt we were at war with the French, in the year 1759, was greatly damaged, part of it being blown up, whether by accident or deſign was never yet known. The harbour is one of the fineſt in the world, as there is water ſufficient for the largeſt ſhips, and is ſo very capacious, that the whole Engliſh navy may ride here in ſafety: the principal branch runs up to Fareham, about ſix miles to the northward of the harbours mouth; a ſecond goes up to Portcheſter; and a third to Portſea-bridge; beſides theſe branches, there are ſeveral rithes or channels, where the ſmall men of war ride at their moorings. It is defended from all winds by ſurrounding lands; and from the fury of the ſea by the Iſle of Wight, which lies before the mouth of the harbour, about ſix miles diſtant. On the 3d of July 1760, a dreadful fire broke out at twelve o'clock in the morning, in the dock-yard, and raged with great fury. It rained very hard all that night, and it is thought the ſtores caught fire by the lightning. In the warehouſes that were conſumed were depoſited 1050 tons of hemp, 500 tons of cordage, and about 700 ſails, beſides many hundred barrels of tar and oil. But a ſtill more dreadful conflagration happened in this dock-yard on the 27th day of July 1770: it was firſt diſcovered by the centinels on duty, about five o'clock in the morning, when the drums beat to arms, and, in a few minutes after, the dock-yard was all in a flame. The houſe where the pitch and tar were lodged was ſoon reduced to a heap of rubbiſh, and, in a few minutes, it broke out in four different parts, and burnt with ſuch violence, that it threatened the whole place. The inhabitants were filled with the greateſt conſternation; but, by the wind ſhifting about, and the aſſiſtance of the marines and ſailors, its progreſs was ſtopped before ſeven in the evening. The rope-houſe was again deſtroyed, December 7, 1776, when the damage was eſtimated at 60,000l. For this act an incendiary, called John the Painter, was found guilty, and executed. At the latter end of Auguſt, 1782, a man of war, of 100 guns, called the Royal George, was unfortunately ſunk in this harbour. Portſmouth ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. The civil government is by a mayor, aldermen, recorder, bailiffs, and common-council. The markets here are Tueſday, Thurſday, and Saturday. Several commodious bathing machines are fitted up on South Sea beach: 27 miles S. Wincheſter, and 72 SW. London. Long. 1. 8. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 44. N.

PORTSMOUTH, a ſea-port town of the United States of America, in New Hampſhire, ſituated at the mouth of the Piſcataqua: 45 miles N. Boſton. Long. 70. 45. W. Greenwich. Lat. 43. 3. N.

PORTSMOUTH, a town of the United States of America, in Virginia, on the Elizabeth river: 10 miles E. Suffolk. Long. 76. 26. W. Greenwich. Lat. 36. 56. N.—On the 17th of May, 1779, this town was taken by the Britiſh troops.

PORTSMOUTH, a town of the United States of America, in North Carolina, on the north end of Core Bank. Long. 76. 26. W. Greenwich. Lat. 34. 54. N.

PORTSMOUTH, a ſea-port town on the weſt coaſt of the iſland of Dominica, near the north extremity. Long. 61. 18. W. Greenwich. Lat. 15. 41. N.

PORTSOY, a ſea-port town of Scotland, in the county of Banff: 5 miles E. Cullen, and 6 WNW. Banff.

PORTUDAL, or Salu, a ſea-port town of Africa, in the country of Senegal, with the beſt harbour on the coaſt, in the kingdom of Baol, where the French have a factory.

PORTUGAL, a country of Europe, bounded on the north and eaſt by Spain, and on the ſouth and weſt by the Atlantic Ocean; about 400 miles in length, from north to ſouth, and 130 in its main breadth, from eaſt to weſt. It was anciently called Luſitania, but its boundaries were then different from what they now are. The name of Portugal is, by ſome, thought to ſignify Portus Gallus, or Portus Gallorum, on account of the multitudes of French, which came to the city of Porto, on the river Duero, in order to aſſiſt the Chriſtians againſt the Moors. But others, with more probability, derive it from a town on the river Duero, by the ancients called Cale. Oppoſite to this place ſome of the inhabitants afterwards, built a new town with a harbour, and gave it the name of Portucale, or The Harbour, or Port of Cale; which, by an uninterrupted proſperity, proved the origin of the preſent flouriſhing city of Porto; and from hence the whole country has received the name of Portugal. The old name of Luſitania was aboliſhed, and the new one took place under Ferdinand the Great, king of Caſtile and Leon, who gave this country and Galicia to his third ſon Garcia. The moſt ancient writing now extant, in which the name of Portugal is uſed for the whole kingdom, is dated in the year 1069. The climate in Portugal is much more temperate than in Spain, though with ſome little difference in the ſeveral provinces. The northern parts feel a kind of a painful cold in winter, though this is chiefly owing to the rains of that ſeaſon; and in the ſouthern the ſummer heats are very great. Both winter and ſummer, however, are very ſupportable, cooling ſea-breezes during the latter refreſhing the country, and the ſpring is extremely delightful. Though the ſoil be very fruitful, ſo much is agriculture neglected here, that above half the country lies waſte; and the inhabitants are ſupplied with a great part of their corn by importation. Portugal, however, abounds in wine and oil, of the latter of which the greateſt part is made in the province of Alentejo, but reckoned inferior to that of Spain. Olive-trees thrive better here near the ſea, than up the country. Here is alſo great plenty of fine honey, and conſequently of wax. Portugal alſo produces abundance of lemons, pomegranates, oranges, figs, raiſins, almonds, cheſtnuts, and other fine fruits. It has likewiſe variety of ſea and river fiſh, and large quantities of ſea-ſalt. And the mountains contain many kinds of ores, as ſilver, copper, tin, and iron. But the Portugueſe being ſupplied with metals from their poſſeſſions in other parts of the globe, and particularly with abundance of gold from America, no mines are worked in their own country. Gems of various kinds are found, and the mountains contain a beautiful variegated marble. On the hill of Alcantara, not far from Liſbon, is a remarkable mine of ſalt-petre. The principal rivers are the Minho, the Lima, the Duero, the Tagus, and the Guadiana. All abound in fiſh. The whole kingdom contains nineteen cividads or cities; 527 villas or ſmaller towns, 3344 pariſhes, and 2,000,000 of ſouls. Their language is a compound of the Spaniſh, Latin, Mooriſh, and French. The high or titled nobility (titulados) conſiſt of dukes, marquiſes, counts, viſcounts, and barons. All thoſe who are grandees and ſtyled dons, like thoſe of Spain, conſiſt of three claſſes, and receive from the royal treaſury a penſion, ſufficient to ſupport their reſpective dignities. The inferior nobility or gentry are termed Fidalgos; and are incapable of bearing the title of don, unleſs by permiſſion from the king. In the ſecond century, Chriſtianity was received all over Spain, to which Portugal was then annexed. In ſucceeding times, the Moors and Jews increaſed greatly, and lived intermingled with the Chriſtians. And though all exerciſe of the Jewiſh religion be prohibited by the fundamental laws of the kingdom, yet there ſtill remain great numbers of ſecret Jews among the Portugueſe, and thoſe too even among the nobility, clergy, and the very inquiſitors themſelves. Many, unable to conceal themſelves, eſcape to Holland; and there openly profeſs Judaiſm. The eſtabliſhed religion, however, of the country is the Roman Catholic. And the inquiſition, which was introduced by king John III. and has ſince been ſet up throughout all the Portugueſe dominions, Brazil excepted, is very active in detecting hereſies and heretics, and no leſs rigorous in puniſhing them. The number of convents in Portugal is ſaid to be no leſs than 900; and moſt of them very rich. Portugal contains one patriarch, three archbiſhops, and ten biſhops, beſides others in America, Africa, the Eaſt Indies, and the iſlands ſubject to the king of Portugal. The king too, beſides the nomination of all biſhops, receives a fourth of their revenue; but this is generally given away in penſions. The pope confirms the biſhops; publiſhes his bulls in the kingdom, without any previous conſent of the king, and by his legate governs the clergy, who, with reſpect to taxes and contributions, depend on him. Coimbra and Evora, indeed, are univerſities, and Liſbon has a royal academy, eſtabliſhed for Portugueſe hiſtory. At Santaren is an academy of hiſtory, antiquity, and languages; and, at St. Thomas, an academy of ſciences on the footing of that at Paris, of which the king was pleaſed to declare himſelf preſident. The Portugueſe carry on a very extenſive trade, but reap no great profit from it, being obliged to vend not only their own products, but all the merchandize and riches brought home to them from their ſettlements in other parts of the globe, and eſpecially from America, to the Europeans trading with them, particularly the Engliſh, in exchange for grain, and ſmall and large quantities of manufactured goods of all kinds, with which they ſupply both Portugal and its poſſeſſions abroad. The goods which they ſell to foreigners are ſea-ſalt, oil, wine, lemons, Seville, and China oranges, figs, raiſins, almonds, cheſtnuts, and other fruits; together with wool, ſilk, and other materials for manufactures; but their chief commodities conſiſt of imports from their own colonies, particularly from Braſil; ſuch as ſugars, tobacco, cocoa-nuts, ivory, ebony, Braſil-wood, hides, ſpices, drugs, gold, pearls, diamonds, and valuable gems. The Portugueſe ſhipping little frequent the other countries of Europe or the Levant, their voyages lying rather to the coaſts of Africa, particularly the Gold Coaſt, whence they carry negroes to Braſil: they meet there alſo with ſome gold and ivory. They trade likewiſe to their Eaſt India colonies of Goa, Diu, and Macao; but this traffic, once ſo very important, is now greatly declined. The whole annual produce of gold in Braſil may, without any exaggeration, be eſtimated at near 2,000,000l. ſterling. The fleet which ſails every year to Braſil, goes and returns in ſeven or eight months; and, when homeward bound, is convoyed by ſome men of war which are ſent to meet it. Ships from Africa, or the Eaſt Indies, come alſo in company. Portugal, or, as it was anciently called Luſitania, paſſed from the Phenicians and Carthaginians into the hands of the Romans, and, by the emperor Auguſtus, was made a Roman province. Towards the beginning of the fifth century, the Alans, about the year 440 the Swabians, and, about the year 582, the Viſigoths, made themſelves maſters of this country. In the eighth century, Portugal was over-run by the Moors and Saracens, but gradually reſcued from them by the Chriſtians. Henry, duke of Burgundy, performed ſuch eminent ſervices to Alphonſo VI. king of Caſtile, againſt the Moors, that he gave him his daughter Thereſa in marriage, and, in the year 1093, created him earl of Portugal, and in 1110, it became, by his father-in-law's will, his abſolute property. Alphonſo Henriques, his ſon and ſucceſſor, obtained a ſignal victory, in the year 1139, over the Moors near Ourique. About the ſame time too, he aſſumed the title of king, and, in the year 1179, confirmed his right to the throne. In the year 1181, he held an aſſembly of the ſtates at Lamego, in which the ſucceſſion to the crown was ſettled. In the year 1580, the male line of the kings failing, the kingdom was united to Spain; but under the kings of this monarchy, the Portugueſe loſt moſt of their foreign acquiſitions, and they were ſo intolerably oppreſſed, that, in the year 1640, they ſhook off the Spaniſh yoke, electing John duke of Braganza, for their king. The government of Portugal is an unlimited monarchy, but with reſpect to the impoſition of new taxes, the ſettlement of the ſucceſſion, and other important concerns, the conſent of the eſtates, which conſiſt of the clergy, the high nobility, and the commons, is neceſſary. The military forces of the Portugueſe are but in an indifferent condition, nor is the navy more formidable. Liſbon is the capital.

POSEN, or Poſnania, a town of Poland, and capital of a palatinate of the ſame name, in Great Poland, ſituated on the Warta, handſome, but not very large. It is encloſed with a double wall, and a deep moat; and on the other ſide of the Warta, it has two ſuburbs, namely, Szrodka and Waliſzewo, which are ſurrounded with a large moraſs. Both the city and ſuburbs are ſubject to frequent inundations, by the overflowing of the river. The caſtle ſtands on an iſland, in the Warta, and is a good ſtructure. It contains ſeveral churches and convents, and is the ſee of a biſhop. The biſhop's palace ſtands near the cathedral, which is a fine ſtructure, and between the moraſſes. This is the firſt in rank, and the moſt ancient biſhop's ſee in Poland. It was founded by the emperor Otho I. in the reign of Miecziſlaus I. king of Poland, and made ſubordinate to the archbiſhopric of Magdeburg; under which it continued a conſiderable time, till it was ſubjected to the archbiſhopric of Gneſna This city owes a great part of its proſperity to the trade with Germany. It is a ſtaple town, and enjoys ſeveral other privileges. A court of judicature is held in this city; and the Chriſtian religion firſt gained a footing in this part of Poland. In the year 1716, Poſen was garriſoned by Saxons; but taken by ſtorm and plundered, by the Poles. This palatinate belongs to the king of Pruſſia, being annexed to his dominions in the year 1773: 145 miles WNW. Warſaw, and 130 S. Dantzick.

POTOSI, a town of South America, in the government of Buenos Ayres, and juriſdiction of Plata, rendered famous by the rich mines in its neighbourhood. It ſtands at the foot of what is called the ſilver mountains, is near two leagues in circuit, and contains above 60,000 Indians, and 10,000 Spaniards, among whom are ſeveral perſons of rank, and the greateſt part poſſeſſed of immenſe fortunes. The air of the mountains being extremely cold and dry, the adjacent country is remarkably barren, producing neither grain, fruits, or herbs. The town, however, is plentifully ſupplied with the beſt proviſion, ſome provinces ſending the choiceſt of their grains and fruits, ſome their cattle, and others their manufactures; while thoſe who trade in European goods reſort to Potoſi, as to a market where there is a great demand, and no want of ſilver to give in exchange. The famous mountain of Potoſi, at the foot of which the town is ſituated, appears above the top of the neighbouring mountains, in the form of a ſugar-loaf. The colour of its ſoil is of a reddiſh brown, and the diſtance from its foot, which is three miles in compaſs, to the ſummit, is nearly a mile. The diſcovery of the immenſe mines in this mountain, happened in the year 1545. From the public accounts, it appears, that ſilver to the value of 9,282,382l. ſterling, has been annually taken from theſe mines. In the neighbourhood have been diſcovered ſome warm mineral baths, to which they attribute conſiderable virtues: 170 miles SSE. Paz. Long. 49. 54. W. Ferro. Lat. 19. 45. S.

POTZDAM, a city of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Middle Mark of Brandenburg, ſituated on an iſland, 16 miles in circumference, formed by the Havel, and ſome neighbouring lakes. In the 14th and 15th centuries, it was but a mean place, and belonged to the family of Rochau, who ceded it, in 1416, to the electoral houſe. The elector, Frederick William, made it his pleaſure ſeat, and in 1662, built the caſtle here, which was afterwards enlarged by king Frederick I. and adorned with a fine portal. King Frederick William began to make ſome very coſtly additions to the town: for which purpoſe, he cauſed ſeveral moraſſes to be filled up and built upon, and a canal of 50 paces wide, and 2000 in length, to be carried on out of the Havel, through the centre of the town, to a branch again of the ſame river. This canal is planted on both ſides with trees, and environed with well built houſes. The town itſelf is divided into Old and New; and the Frederichſtadt, to which alſo belongs the Bodengraft. Frederick II. has raiſed the caſtle one ſtory, enlarged it with two wings, and adorned it with magnificent apartments. The old houſes in the neighbourhood of the caſtle are pulled down, and inſtead of them, new, regular, and grand buildings have been raiſed for the owners, at the king's expence. Before the caſtle is a large place, or ſquare, adorned with Roman columns, in which the ſoldiers that lie here in garriſon are daily exerciſed. In the market-place is erected a pyramidal obeliſk of four ſides, which are compoſed of variegated Sileſian marble, and is 75 feet in height. On one ſide, ſtands a marble buſt of the king. The pedeſtal of it is of white Italian marble, and at each corner is a ſmall ſtatue of the ſame. The town-church, which ſtands not far from the caſtle, is a fine ſtructure. The garriſon-church is large, and has a marble pulpit, under which lies the monument of king Frederick William. In the orphan-houſe, which was founded in 1724, are maintained, brought up, and educated, above 2000 ſoldiers' children, of both ſexes. Belonging to it, is one Lutheran and one Calviniſt preacher. To this foundation is annexed the neighbouring village of Bornſtadt, together with the gold and ſilver manufacture, and the magazine at Berlin. The foundry for arms is important. We find likewiſe, in this town, a velvet and ſilk manufacture, and other manufactures and fabrics. In it generally reſide the king's guards, both horſe and foot, with other battalions, by way of garriſon: 15 miles SW. Berlin, and 52 ENE. Magdeburg. Long. 30. 46. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 25. N.

PRAGUE, a city of Germany, and capital of Bohemia, ſituated in the circle of Schlan, almoſt in the centre of the kingdom. The fortifications of Prague are not very important; the town may be flanked or raked on all ſides. The houſes are wholly built of ſtone, and for the moſt part, conſiſt of three ſtories. It has broader ſtreets, but fewer ſtately palaces, than Vienna. In it are computed, 92 churches and chapels, with about 40 cloiſters. The town, conſidered with reſpect to its extent, is not ſufficiently populous, as containing only about 70,000 Chriſtians, and between 12,000 and 13,000 Jewiſh inhabitants. Neither is the commerce carried on here conſiderable, but, excluſive of the arts and handicraft trades, its principal means of ſubſiſtence is drawn from the brewing of beer. Prague conſiſts properly of three towns, each of which has its peculiar head-man and magiſtrate; as namely, of the Old and New Towns, which lie on the eaſt ſide of the Mulda, and of the Small Side, which is on the weſt ſide of that river. The Old Town is leſs ancient than that which is called the Small Side, but older than the New Town, and was alſo, from its ancient citadel, formerly called Wichſerad, and the Great Town, by way of diſtinction from the Leſſer Side, or Town. It was firſt founded in the year 795. The number of houſes in it is eſtimated at between 1800 and 2000; and the Jews' town, belonging thereto, at about 400. The Newſtadt, or New Town, being founded by Charles IV. in the year 1348, was called Karlow, or Karlſtadt, and the ſame privileges with the Old Town conferred upon it. It environs the Old Town for a conſiderable compaſs, contains broad and ſtraight ſtreets in it, and about 2500 houſes. The Small Side, or Leſſer Town, which is united with the foregoing by means of a bridge of ſtone, erected over the Mulda, is the moſt ancient part of the city of Prague, being founded by the Libutſa, and at firſt bore the name of Prague. It contains about 600 houſes. Prague is the ſee of an archbiſhop, erected from a biſhopric in the year 1343. In the year 1631, Pragne was taken by the Saxons; in 1648, the Small Side was forced by the Swedes, and in 1741, all Prague, by the elector of Bavaria. In 1742, the Auſtrian forces cooped up about 20,000 French in Pragne, who were commanded by the marſhals Broglio and Belliſle, who endured great hardſhips from famine, but defended themſelves bravely, and at length partly found means to make their eſcape, and partly obtained a free retreat. In the year 1744, the Pruſſians made themſelves maſters of this capital, after cannonading it for ſeven days, but quitted it in the ſame year. As it fell again under the Auſtrian juriſdiction, the Jews were all ordered to depart, and quit Bohemia; but the queen, changing her reſolution, granted them the farther continuance of their abode there. Without the Strahov gate, one hour's diſtance from the city, ſtands what is called the White Mountain, which, on account of the battle fought there in the year 1620, and which ended unhappily on the ſide of the Palſgrave, and crowned king of Bohemia, Frederick, is become remarkable. In the year 1757, Prague was beſieged by the Pruſſians, but without ſucceſs: 240 miles E. Mentz. Long. 32. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 2. N.

PRINCE WILLIAM HENRY'S ISLAND, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Ocean. Long. 149. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 1. 32. S.

PRINCE WILLIAM'S SOUND, an inlet of the North Pacific Ocean, which occupies at leaſt a degree and a half of latitude, and two of longitude, excluſive of the arms and branches, the extent of which is not known. Captain Cook, who diſcovered it in the year 1778, ſays, the natives, who came to make them ſeveral viſits while they were in the Sound, were generally not above the common height, though many of them were under it. They were ſquare, or ſtrong cheſted; and the moſt diſproportioned part of their body ſeemed to be their heads, which were very large: with thick, ſhort necks, and large, broad, or ſpreading faces; which, upon the whole, were flat. Their eyes, though not ſmall, ſcarcely bore a proportionate ſize to their faces; and their noſes had full, round points, hooked or turned up at the tip. Their teeth were broad, white, equal in ſize, and evenly ſet. Their hair was black, thick, ſtraight, and ſtrong; and their beards, in general, thin or wanting; but the hairs about the lips of thoſe who have them, were ſtiff or briſtly, and frequently of a brown colour; and ſeveral of the elderly men had even, large, and thick, but ſtraight beards. Their common dreſs (for men, women, and children, are clothed alike) is a kind of cloſe frock, or rather robe, reaching generally to the ankles, though ſometimes only to the knees. At the upper part, is a hole, juſt ſufficient to admit the head, with ſleeves that reach to the wriſt. Theſe frocks are made of the ſkins of different animals; the moſt common of which are the ſea-otter, grey fox, racoon, and pine martin; with many of ſeal-ſkins, and, in general, they are worn with the hairy ſide outward. Some alſo have theſe frocks made of the ſkin of fowls, with only the down remaining on them, which they glue on other ſubſtances; and we ſaw one or two woollen garments, like thoſe of Nootka. In general, they do not cover their legs or feet; but a few have a kind of ſkin ſtockings, which reach half way up the thigh; and ſcarcely any of them are without mittens for their hands, made of the ſkins of bears' paws. Thoſe who wear any thing on their heads, reſembled in this reſpect, our friends at Nootka, having high truncated conic caps, made of ſtraw, and ſometimes of wood, reſembling a ſeal's head, well painted. The men commonly wear the hair cropt round the neck and forehead; but the women allow it to grow long; and moſt of them tie a ſmall lock of it on the crown; or a few club it behind, after our manner. Both ſexes have the ears perforated with ſeveral holes, about the outer and lower parts of the edge, in which they hang little bunches of beads, made of the ſame tubulous ſhelly ſubſtance uſed for this purpoſe by thoſe of Nootka. The ſeptum of the noſe is alſo perforated; through which they frequently thruſt the quill-ſeathers of ſmall birds, or little bending ornaments, made of the above ſhelly ſubſtance, ſtrung on a ſtiff ſtring, or cord, three or four inches long, which give them a truly groteſque appearance. But the moſt uncommon and unſightly ornamented faſhion, adopted by ſome of both ſexes, is their having their under lip ſlit, or cut quite through, in the direction of the mouth, a little below the ſwell-part. This inciſion, which is made even in the ſucking children, is often above two inches long; and either by its natural retraction, when the wound is freſh, or by the repetition of ſome artificial management, aſſumes the true ſhape of lips, and becomes ſo large as to admit the tongue through. The food which they ſaw them eat, was dried fiſh, and the fleſh of ſome animal, either broiled or roaſted. Some of the latter that was brought, ſeemed to be bear's fleſh, but with a fiſhy taſte. As to the animals of this part of the continent, the ſame muſt be underſtood as of thoſe at Nootka; that is, that the knowledge we have of them is entirely taken from the ſkins which the natives brought to ſell. Theſe were chiefly of ſeals; a few foxes; the whitiſh cat, or lynx; common and pine martins; ſmall ermines; bears; racoons, and ſea-otters; of theſe the moſt common are, the martin, racoon, and ſea-otter, which compoſed the ordinary dreſs of the natives. Of the birds mentioned at Nootka, we found here only the white-headed eagle; the ſhag; the alcyon, or great king-fiſher, which had very fine bright colours; and the humming-bird, which came frequently and flew about the ſhip, while at anchor; though it can ſcarcely live here in the winter, which muſt be very ſevere. The water-fowls were geeſe; a ſmall ſort of duck; and ſome of the black ſea-pyes, with red bills, which they found at Van Diemen's Land, and New Zealand. The metals they ſaw were copper and iron, both in plenty. Few vegetables of any kind were ſeen; and the trees which chiefly grew here were the Canadian, and ſpruce pine, and ſome of them tolerably large. Long. 147. W. Greenwich. Lat. 20. to 61. N.

PRINCE'S BAY, or Barawally, a bay on the weſt coaſt of the iſland of St. Vincent: 2 miles S. Cumberland Bay.

PRINCE'S ISLAND, an iſland in the Atlantic, near the coaſt of Africa, 30 leagues in circumference; ſo called, becauſe the revenues were aſſigned to the prince of Portugal, diſcovered in the year 1471. The air is wholeſome, the land elevated and fertile; rice, tobacco, millet, oranges, lemons, bananas, cocoa, ſugar-canes, manioc, and grapes, are the principal productions. On the north coaſt is a town, containing about 200 houſes, with a good harbour. Long. 26. 45. E. Ferro. Lat. 1. 30. N.

PRINCE'S ISLAND, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, viſited by European ſhips for wood and water. This iſland is ſubject to the king of Bantam, and is called Secllan, by the Malays, and Paneitan, by the inhabitants. It is ſituated at the weſt entrance of the Straits of Sunda. Long. 121. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 6. 20. S.

PRINCE'S ISLAND, or Pulo Selan, a ſmall iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Ocean, ſituated in the weſtern mouth of the Strait of Sunda. Capt. Cook viſited it in the year 1771, and deſcribes it as follows. It is woody and very ſmall, part only has been cleared: there is no remarkable hill upon it, yet the Engliſh call the ſmall eminence which is juſt over the landing-place, The Pike. It was formerly much frequented by the Indian ſhips of many nations, but eſpecially thoſe of England, which of late have forſaken it, as it is ſaid, becauſe the water is bad, and touch either at North Iſland, a ſmall iſland that lies on the coaſt of Sumatra, without the eaſt entrance of the Strait, or at New Bay, which lies only a few leagues from Prince's Iſland, at neither of which places any conſiderable quantity of other refreſhments can be procured. Prince's Iſland is, upon the whole, certainly more eligible than either of them; and though the water is brackiſh, if it be filled at the lower part of the brook, yet higher up it may be found excellent. The firſt and ſecond, and perhaps the third ſhip that comes in the ſeaſon, may be tolerably ſupplied with turtle; but thoſe that come afterwards muſt be content with ſmall ones. Cocoa-nuts were bought at the rate of 100 for a dollar, if they were picked; and if taken promiſcuouſly, 130. Plantains he found in great plenty, alſo ſome pine-apples, water melons, jaccas, and pumpkins, beſides rice, the greater part of which was of the mountain kind, that grows in dry land. The inhabitants are Javaneſe, whoſe raja is ſubject to the ſultan of Bantam. Their cuſtoms are very ſimilar to thoſe of the Indians about Batavia; but they ſeem to be more jealous of their women. They profeſs the Mahometan religion. The houſes of their town are built upon piles, or pillars, four or five feet above the ground; upon theſe is laid a floor of bamboo canes, which are placed at ſome diſtance from each other, ſo as to leave a free paſſage for the air from below; the walls alſo are of bamboo, which are interwoven hurdlewiſe, with ſmall ſticks, that are faſtened perpendicularly to the beams, which form the frame of the building. The diſpoſition of the people, as far as they could diſcover it, is good. They dealt very honeſtly, except, like all other Indians, and the itinerant retailers of fiſh in London, they aſked ſometimes twice, and ſometimes thrice as much for their commodities as they would take. They all ſpeak the Malay language, though they have a language of their own, different both from the Malay and the Javaneſe. Their own language they call Catta Gunung, the language of the mountains; and they ſay that it is ſpoken upon the mountains of Java, whence their tribe originally migrated. Long. 156. W. PRUSSIA, a country of Europe, bounded on the north by the Baltic, Lithuania, and Samogitia, on the eaſt by Lithuania, on the ſouth by Poland, and on the weſt by Pomerelia and the Baltic, about 160 miles in length, and where broadeſt 96. As to the climate and temperature of the air, the two laſt months of the ſpring, and the two firſt ſummer months are temperate, warm, and pleaſant; and the weather generally very favourable to bring the fruits of the earth to maturity. But, before and after theſe months, the air is cold and piercing; the autumns being often wet, and the winters ſevere. The ſoil produces plenty of corn, eſculent herbs, fruit, and paſturage. Pruſſia alſo abounds with flocks and herds, and exceedingly fine horſes; its chief commodities are wool, honey, wax, pitch, pit-coal, flax, hemp, hops, and buck-wheat. This country affords plenty of game, as white and common hares, elks, deer, ſtags, roe-bucks, and wild-boars; but, at the ſame time, it is infeſted with beaſts of prey, as lynxes, wolves, foxes, and bears. Amber is found in vaſt quantities on the coaſt of the Baltic, in Pruſſia, eſpecially on the Samland ſhore. The profit ariſing from it is one of the Pruſſian Regalia, and amounts annually to about 26,000 dollars. This country yields neither ſalt, wine, nor minerals, however, it contains iron ore in ſome places. It is for the moſt part a level champaign country. The lakes, rivers, and canals of this country, together with the neighbouring ſea, afford a variety of excellent fiſh; as ſalmon, ſturgeon, cod, turbots, ſoles, muræna (a kind of lampreys, which are peculiar to Pomerania and Pruſſia), hallybuts, pike, perch, plaiſe, eels, &c. The principal rivers of Pruſſia are the Viſtula, Pregel, Memel, Paſſarage, and Alle. As for the inland lakes of which this country has a great number, from four to thirty miles in length, and from four to eight in breadth, thoſe of Spirding, Angerburg, Rein, and Drauſen are the principal. The number of inhabitants in this kingdom were computed, in the year 1755, at 635,998 perſons capable of bearing arms. They conſiſt of native Pruſſians, who by their language and manners appear to be genuine deſcendants of the Germans; Lithuanians, whoſe anceſtors were the Sclavonians and Nadravians, and have their peculiar language; and Poles, who are deſcended from the Sudavians. Here are alſo a great number of French, Engliſh, and Hollanders. The inhabitants of this country, in general, are Lutherans; but a great number of the coloniſts are Calviniſts. They have churches appropriated for their uſe, while in ſome places they perform their ſervice in the Lutheran churches; the Roman Catholics are few. The manufactures are increaſing, eſpecially glaſs, iron, copper, braſs, paper, cloth, linen, &c. The ſituation is convenient for commerce, and for the promotion of it, a college has been eſtabliſhed, which takes notice of, and regulates, all concerns relating to trade and navigation. The chief articles of exportation are grain of different kinds, maſts, deals, and other timber, tar, wood and pot-aſhes, ſkins, leather, furs, amber, wax, honey, manna, lin-ſeed oil, flax, hemp, lin-ſeed, and hemp-ſeed; alſo yarn, hog's briſtles, ſtags'-horns, and elks' hoofs; oat-meal of all kinds, mead, dried fiſh, ſturgeon, caviar, lampreys, ſauſages, butter, and tallow. The ancient Pruſſian hiſtory is involved in obſcurity. About 300 years before the birth of Chriſt, it is ſaid that this country was poſſeſſed by the Aeſtions, a Gothic people; and after that, by the Alanians, Vandals, Gallindians, Sudavians, and Sclavonians. Theſe different nations at laſt became one people, and were for a long time without any chief or ſovereign. The amber with which Pruſſia abounds, was the allurement which raiſed the curioſity of the ancient Romans; and induced them to penetrate into the country, and ſubdue it. That part of Pruſſia which lies beyond the Viſtula, and borders on Germany, ſubmitted to the emperor Charles the Great, and though, ſome time after, it recovered its liberty, it was again reduced, and obliged to pay tribute. From that æra the Pruſſian hiſtory begins to clear up; for the kings of Poland, in that age, took great pains, and even made uſe of compulſion and force of arms, for the converſion of the pagan Pruſſians to Chriſtianity. Boleſlaus I. began, by chaſtizing the Pruſſians for the murder of St. Adalbert, who was deſirous of being the apoſtle of that nation. His ſucceſſors, from time to time, had ſeveral quarrels with the inhabitants of Pruſſia; and Boleſlaus IV. who committed dreadful ravages in their country, loſt his life, in an unſucceſsful battle which was fought in 1163. The Teutonic knights ſubdued the whole country, but, in the year 1454, one half of Pruſſia revolted from their obedience, and declared for Caſimir III. king of Poland. This occaſioned freſh effuſions of blood; till at laſt, in the year 1466, it was concluded, by treaty, that one part of Pruſſia, now called Poliſh Pruſſia, ſhould continue a free province, under the king's protection; and that the knights and the grand-maſter ſhould retain the other part, which they were to hold as a fief, and acknowledge themſelves vaſſals of Poland. The knights ſoon after, endeavoured to throw off this yoke; but did not ſucceed in their attempt. In 1519, they ſtirred up new wars, which were terminated in 1525, by a treaty of peace concluded at Cracow. It was then agreed that the marggrave Albert, grand-maſter of the Teutonic order, ſhould be acknowledged duke or ſovereign of the eaſt part of Pruſſia, which he was to hold as a fief of Poland. Theſe territories, however, were to deſcend to his male heirs; and, upon failure of male iſſue, to his brothers, and their male heirs. Thus ended the ſovereignty of the Teutonic order in Pruſſia, after it had ſubſiſted 300 years. The new duke favoured the introducing of the reformed religion into his dominions; and, in 1544, founded an univerſity at Konigſberg. The elector Joachim added Pruſſia to the dominions of the electoral houſe of Brandenburg, with which it had been cloſely connected for a long time before. The elector Frederick raiſed Pruſſia to a kingdom; and on the 18th of January, 1704, with his own hands put the crown on his head, and on that of his conſort, at Konigſberg. He was ſoon after acknowledged as king of Pruſſia, by all the other Chriſtian powers. The kingdom of Pruſſia is divided into three parts, namely, Samland, Natangen, and Oberland; and each of theſe is ſub-divided into certain haupt-aemter, juriſdictions, or governments, beſides which a part of Lithuania called Little Lithuania, or Pruſſian Lithuania is added to it, thus forming two departments: the German, the capital of which is Konigſberg; and the Lithuanian, the principal places of which are Memel and Tilſit.

PRUTH, a river of Poland, which riſes in the ſouth-weſt part of the new kingdom of Galicia, on the borders of Hungary, paſſes through Moldavia, and joins the Danube, near Renay, in Beſſarabia. In the year 1711, Peter the Great, in a war with the Turks, encamped his army on the banks of this river, not far from Jaſſy, in ſo diſadvantageous a ſituation, that he ſeemed to have no hope, but the deſperate one of cutting his way through the enemy; with this reſolution he retired to his tent, in an agony of deſpair, and gave poſitive orders that no one ſhould be admitted, under pain of death. In this important juncture, the principal officers, and the vice-chancellor Shaffirof, aſſembled, in the preſence of Catherine; and drew up certain preliminaries, in order to obtain a truce from the grand vizier. In conſequence of this determination, plenipotentiaries were immediately diſpatched, without the knowledge of Peter, to the grand vizier; and a peace obtained upon more reaſonable conditions than could have been expected: this is called the peace of Pruth.

PULO TIMOAN, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Ocean, inhabited by Malays. Commodore Byron called there in the year 1765, who found them to be a ſurly inſolent ſet of people. As ſoon as they ſaw him approach the ſhore, they came down to the beach in great numbers, having a long knife in one hand, a ſpear headed with iron in the other, and a creſſit or dagger by their ſide. They went on ſhore, however, notwithſtanding theſe hoſtile appearances, and a treaty ſoon commenced; but all they could procure was about a dozen fowls, and a goat and kid. The commodore offered them knives, hatchets, bill-hooks, and other things of the ſame kind; but theſe they refuſed with great contempt, and demanded rupees: as he had no rupees, they were at firſt much at a loſs how to pay for their purchaſe; but at laſt they bethought themſelves of ſome pocket handkerchiefs, and theſe they vouchſafed to accept, though they would take only the beſt. Theſe people were of a ſmall ſtature, but extremely well made, and of a dark copper-colour. PUNA, an iſland in the Pacific Ocean, near the weſt coaſt of America, in the Bay of Guayaquil, about 20 leagues in circumference. It is very flat low land, and the tide runs very ſtrong on every ſide of it, but in ſo many different directions, by reaſon of the many rivers running into the ſea near it, that there are a great many dangerous ſand-banks round it. Puna is the capital, and indeed the only place on the iſland, ſituated at the head of the harbour, in the north-eaſt part of the iſland. It conſiſts of about fifty houſes, and a ſmall church. The houſes are all built upon poſts ten or twelve feet high, with ladders on the outſide to go up to them, becauſe of the inundation to which the river of Guayaquil is very ſubject. They are thatched with palmetto leaves, and their chambers well boarded. According to an ancient tradition, the inhabitants of this iſland amounted to between 12,000 and 14,000; whereas at preſent they do not exceed 300, and conſiſt chiefly of Caſts and Spaniards, the Indians being very few. Both the lieutenant and prieſt reſide here; and the large ſhips which cannot lie at Guayaquil, by reaſon of the ſand-banks, load and unload here; there being very good anchoring againſt the middle of the town, and five fathoms water within a cable's length of the ſhore. Long. 62. Pyrennées (Upper, Department of), one of the diviſions of France, bounded on the north by the department of the Gers, on the eaſt by the department of the Upper Garonne, on the ſouth by Spain, and on the weſt by the department of the Lower Pyrennées, 53 miles in length, and from 25 to 38 in breadth; a ſmall diſtrict towards the north is ſcarcely more than 7 miles in breadth. This department is compoſed chiefly of the province of Bigorre. Tarbes is the capital.

PYRGOS, a town in the iſland of Santarin.

PYRMONT, a town of Germany, and capital of the county ſo called; ſituated near ſome celebrated mineral ſprings, of a vinous acid taſte, well known all over Europe and America. The citadel of Pyrmont is fortified with a broad ditch, high ramparts, ſubterraneous paſſages and vaults. The old citadel, which was firſt founded in the year 1526, was pulled down in 1706, and a new one erected in its ſtead. The citadel was taken in the year 1630, by the biſhop of Paderborn, after a ſiege of ten months; and, in 1633, by the Swedes, after a ſiege of two months, as alſo again in the year 1636, by the imperialiſts, and, in 1646, by the Swedes: 12 miles SW. Hameln, and 50 E. Monſter.

PYRMONT, a county and principality of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, bounded on the north by the principality of Calenberg, on the eaſt by Wolfenbuttle and Calenberg, on the ſouth by Wolfenbuttle, and on the weſt by the county of Lippe; about nine miles in length, and three in breadth. The lower part of the county is a beautiful and pleaſant vally, watered by the Emmer. This county came to the houſe of Waldeck, in the year 1625. The annual revenues are eſtimated at 30,000 rix-dollars, which principally ariſe from the mineral ſprings and ſalt-works. The matricular aſſeſſment is 14 florins, and taxed to the imperial chamber 17 rix-dollars 78 kruitzers.

PYRRSTEIN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and biſhopric of Paſſau, inſulated in Auſtria: 10 miles NW. Lintz, and 22 E. Paſſau.

QUANG-SI, a province of China, bounded on the north-weſt by the province of Se-tchuen, on the north-eaſt by Hou-quang, on the ſouth and ſouth eaſt by Quang-tong, on the ſouth-weſt by Tonkin, and on the weſt by Yunnan ; about 360 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 230 from north to ſouth. Neither its extent nor commerce is equal to that of the other provinces ; however, it is ſo abundant in rice, that it ſupplies, for ſix months in the year, the province of Quang-tong, the inhabitants of which, without this aſſiſtance, could not ſubſiſt. As the mountains, with which it is covered, eſpecially towards the north, abound with mines of gold, ſilver, copper, and tin, the governor of one of the cities of the firſt claſs preſented, ſome years ago, a memorial to the emperor, in which he propoſed a plan for preventing the inconveniencies that might reſult from the working of theſe mines : he mentioned, among other things, that the people of the country had offered to open them at their own charges, and to admit no one to work in them who had not a patent from his mandarin, and who could not procure four ſureties to anſwer for his good behaviour. The emperor, having read this memorial, referred it for examination to the hou-pou, or court of finances. This ſovereign tribunal, after mature deliberation, approved of the plan, but inſiſted, that, according to what had been practiſed formerly upon a like occaſion, forty per cent. ſhould be given to the emperor, and five per cent. to the officers and ſoldiers who preſided over the works : the prince afterwards reſerved to himſelf the gold-mines, and cauſed them to be opened at his own expence. A very ſingular tree grows in this province ; inſtead of pith it contains a ſoft pulp, which yields a kind of flour : the bread made of it is ſaid to be exceedingly good. Beſides parroquets, hedge-hogs, and the rhinoceros, a prodigious number of wild animals, curious birds, and uncommon inſects are found here. This province contains 12 towns of the firſt claſs, and 80 of the ſecond and third. Kouei-ling is the capital.

QUANG-TCHANG, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Chan-ſi : 28 miles S. Ouei.

QUANG-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Quang-tong, called by the Europeans Canton. See Canton.

QUANG-TONG, the moſt conſiderable of the ſouthern provinces of China ; it is bounded on the north-eaſt by Fo-kien, on the north by Kiang-ſi, on the weſt by Quang-ſi and the kingdom of Tong-king ; the reſt is waſhed by the ſea. The country is diverſified with plains and mountains, and the land is ſo fertile, that it produces two crops every year. Trade and the fertility of the ſoil ſupply this province with every thing that can contribute to the pleaſures of life : it furniſhes gold, precious ſtones, ſilk, pearls, eagle wood, tin, quick ſilver, ſugar, copper, iron, ſteel, ſaltpetre, ebony, and abundance of aromatic woods, which are in great requeſt. Beſides a great many of the fruits of Europe, and of thoſe which grow in the Indies, it produces ſeveral which are peculiar to itſelf. All the coaſts abound with fiſh, and furniſh great quantities of oyſters, crabs, and tortoiſes of an immenſe ſize : of their ſhells the Chineſe make ſeveral kinds of toys. A prodigious number of tame ducks are raiſed in this province : the particular care and induſtry employed by the Chineſe in breeding them have multiplied them here exceedingly ; they hatch their eggs in ovens or dunghills ; but it does not appear that they have received this cuſtom from Egypt. They load a great number of ſmall barks with them, and carry them in flocks to feed on the ſea ſhore, where at low water theſe fowls find ſhrimps, oyſters, and other kinds of ſhell-fiſh. Theſe ſmall fleets generally go in company, and the ducks ſoon mix together on the ſhore, but when night approaches they are collected together by only beating on a baſon : they immediately form themſelves into different flocks, and each returns to the veſſel it belongs to. The Chineſe have the ſecret of ſalting large quantities of their fleſh in ſuch a manner that it loſes nothing of its original flavour ; they are alſo acquainted with the art of ſalting their eggs, by covering them with a coat of clay mixed with ſalt : were they ſteeped in brine, it would not penetrate through the pores of the ſhell ; but obſervation has taught the Chineſe that clay alone, impregnated with ſalt, has this property. Although the climate of this province is warm, the air is pure and the people are robuſt and healthy. They are very induſtrious, and it muſt be allowed that they poſſeſs, in an eminent degree, the talent of imitation : if they are only ſhewn any of our European works, they execute others like them with the moſt ſurprizing exactneſs. This province ſuffered much during the civil wars, but at preſent is one of the moſt flouriſhing in the empire, and as it is a great diſtance from court, its government is one of the moſt important. The viceroy of it has alſo the command of Quang-ſi, and reſides at Chao-king, in order that he may more readily expedite his orders to either of theſe provinces. This governor always keeps a certain number of troops, properly poſted, to check the incurſions of robbers and pirates, who without this precaution, might multiply ſo much as to hurt and interrupt trade : for this reaſon, a great number of fortreſſes (the greater part of which are cities, provided with numerous garriſons) have been built along the coaſts, and in the interior parts of th country. This province is divided into ten diſtricts, which contain t cities of the firſt claſs, and 84 of the ſecond and third. Canton, or Quang-tcheou, is the capital.

QUANG-YANG, a town of China, of the third rank, in the provinc of Quang-ſi : 30 miles S. Tſuen.

QUEAUX, a town of France, in the department of the Vienne : leagues SE. Poitiers.

QUEBEC, a city of North America, and capital of Canada, ſituated o the river St. Lawrence, where it is joined by the river St. Charles, founde by the French, in the year 1608. The baſon is very ſpacious, being ſuf ficient to contain 100 ſail of men of war of the line. The river St. Law rence, which is about four leagues wide above the town, here ſhrinks itſel at once to the breadth of a ſingle mile, and on this account the city wa called Quebec, which in the language of the Indians of that country ſigni fies a ſhrinking or growing narrower. The harbour, which faces the town is ſafe and commodious, and the water about twenty-five fathom deep At the time when the city was founded, the tide reached the foot of th rock ; but ſince that time the river has ſunk ſo far, that a large ſpot o ground is left dry, and on this a large ſuburb is built, called the Lower Town, which ſtands at the foot of a rocky precipice about 48 feet high The houſes in the Lower Town are of ſtone, ſtrong, well built, and chiefl inhabited by merchants for the conveniency of their trade, which is ver conſiderable. The fortifications are far from being regular ; though th place, from its ſituation is capable of making a ſtout defence, if attacke by ſhips from the river, as their guns cannot injure the works of the Uppe Town, while they themſelves muſt ſuffer greatly from the cannon an bombs from theſe lofty ramparts. The lower town is defended by a plat form, flanked with two baſtions, which at high water and ſpring tides ar almoſt level with the ſurface of the water. A little above the baſtion, t the right, is a half baſtion cut out of the rock ; a little higher a large bat tery, and higher ſtill a large fort, the moſt regular of all the fortifications and in which the governor reſides. The paſſages which form a communi cation between theſe works are extremely rugged. The rock which ſeparat the Upper from the Lower Town, extends itſelf, and continues with a bol and ſteep front a conſiderable way to the weſtward, along the river St Lawrence. The Upper Town is alſo well built, and abounds with nobl edifices, as churches and palaces. But the nobleſt ſtructure of the who is the palace where the governor reſides, where was the grand council o the colony, while Quebec was in the hands of the French, and where a the royal ſtores are depoſited. Beſides the Lower Town above mentione there is another beyond the Upper Town, ſituated on the banks of the rive St. Charles, and the environs are decorated with country ſeats, &c. T caſtle ſtands on the brow of a rugged hill, about forty fathoms above th town ; but is an irregular fortification, having only two baſtions, and ditch towards the city. Beſides theſe there are ſeveral other ſmall fortifi cations ſcattered here and there. Though the principal ſtructures are i the Upper Town, from its being originally the only place, yet the Low Town has greatly the advantage, the former ſtanding ſo very bleak, th the cold is double to what it is in the latter. Beſides this the lower to has plenty of water, which is ſometimes ſcarce in the Upper Town. In the year 1711, an attempt was made by the Engliſh and Americans, under the command of brigadier Hill, to ſurpriſe Quebec, but it proved abortive, and it remained in poſſeſſion of the French, till the year 1759, when it was taken by the Engliſh, under the command of the brave general Wolfe, who fell in the engagement; and by the peace in 1763, it was ceded with the reſt of Canada to the conquerors. Long. 71. 10. W. Greenwich. Lat. 46. 50. N.—In the year 1776, the Americans made an unſucceſsful attempt againſt this city, with the loſs of about 700 men, and their commander, Mr. Montgomery.

QUEDA, a city and ſea-port on the weſt coaſt of the peninſula of Malacca, the capital of a kingdom, tributary to Siam, with a good harbour, and containing 7000 inhabitants. It is a place of conſiderable commerce, eſpecially in pepper. The environs are agreeable and fertile, the woods abound in elephants and other animals, and in ſome places are mines of tin and lead, which ſupply large quantities of thoſe metals for exportation to Hindooſtan, Arabia, and Perſia: 300 miles ENE. Acheen. Lat. 6. 40. N.

QUEDLINGBURG, a princely abby of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, ſituated on a hill, near the town of Quedlingburg. This abby was founded betwixt the years 932 and 936, by king Henry I. and enriched with farther endowments by his conſort, Matilda; but in 937, and in the following years, it received other donations from the emperor Otho I. In 1539, it embraced Lutheraniſm, and by ſeveral formal acts and oaths, is bound to the maintenance of that religion. It conſiſts at preſent of four dignitaries, viz. of the lady-abbeſs and three others, who are diſtinguiſhed by the title of provoſt, dean, and canon. The aſſeſſment to a Roman month is 52 florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar 81 rixdollars, 18 kruitzers. Anciently, the houſe of Aſcania, or Anhalt, held the patronage or government of Quedlinburg as a fief from the abby. On the failure of the electors of Saxony of this houſe, in the year 1420, the town of its own nomination committed itſelf to the patronage of the biſhop of Halberſtadt; but the elector Erneſt, and duke Albert of Saxony, brothers to the abbeſs Hedwiga, in 1477, by force, reduced it again under the dominion of their ſiſter, who, in return, conferred the patronage and upper-juriſdiction on her brothers as a male fief. The government of the abby continued hereditary in the houſe of Saxony, by which it was at length transferred to the houſe of Brandenburg, for the ſum of 300,000 rixdollars; and thus the hereditary, or lower juriſdiction, was all that remained to the abbeſs. By virtue of the agreement concluded in 1574, betwixt the elector Auguſtus and the abbeſs Elizabeth, no abbeſs or any other dignitary is to be choſen without the knowledge of the patron or againſt his conſent.

QUEDLINGBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Halberſtadt, on the Boda, which divides it into Old and New Town. There are ſeveral churches, an hoſpital, and a college. King Henry I. began to build, and at the ſame time to fortify this town, in the year 920, on his being elected king of the Germans. In 937, the emperor, Otho I. conferred the town and imperial palace on the abby. In 1326, the Old Town, of its own authority, put itſelf under the protection of the biſhop of Halberſtadt, and contrary to the will of the abbeſs, acceded to the Hanſe confederacy. But in 1477, being maſtered by the elector Erneſt and duke Albert of Saxony, it was reduced to the ſubjection of the abbeſs, and its conſtitution changed. In 1583, a conference was held here betwixt the divines of Saxony and the palatinate of Brandenburg. Moſt of the villages belonging to the abby have been utterly deſtroyed by war: 20 miles W. Bernburg, and 7 SSE. Halberſtadt.

QUEDLITZ, a town of Pruſſia, in the province of Ermeland: 4 miles S. Wartenburg.

QUEEN ANN, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maryland, in a county of the ſame name, on the river Patuxen: 13 miles SW. Annapolis.

QUEENBOROUGH, a town of England, ſituated at the weſt end of the iſland of Sheepey, in the mouth of the Medway. This place was firſt made a borough by Edward III. who rebuilt a caſtle—this caſtle was ſtanding in the year 1629, but has ſince been demoliſhed. Queenborough ſends two members to the Britiſh Parliament. The principal ſupport to Queenborough is the oyſter-fiſhery: 15 miles ENE. Rocheſter, and 45 E. London. Lat. 51. 23. N.

QUEENBOROUGH, a town of United America, in the ſtate of South Carolina, on the weſt ſide of the Great Pedee River: 76 miles NNE. Charleſtown. Long. 79. 18. W. Greenwich. Lat. 33. 58. N.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S FORELAND, the ſouth-eaſt extremity of New Caledonia.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S FORELAND, the ſouth-weſt point of New Hanover.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLAND, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean. Long. 138. 4. W. Greenwich. Lat. 19. 18. S.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLANDS, a group of iſlands diſcovered by capt. Carteret, in the year 1767, conſiſting of Egmont's Iſland, or New Guernſey, Lord Howe's Iſland, or New Jerſey, and ſeveral others. Capt. Carteret ſent a cutter, with the maſter and a party of men, on ſhore, to cultivate a friendſhip with the natives, but a quarrel enſued, in which many of the Indians were killed, and on the ſide of the Engliſh, the maſter and three of the ſeamen were wounded by the arrows of the Indians, and ſoon after died of their wounds. All this evidently aroſe from the miſconduct of the maſter; for, according to the report of the ſurvivors, the Indians behaved with the greateſt confidence and friendſhip till he gave them juſt cauſe of offence, by ordering the people that were with him, who had been regaled in one of their houſes, to cut down a cocoa-nut-tree, and inſiſting upon the execution of his order, notwithſtanding the diſpleaſure which the Indians ſtrongly expreſſed upon the occaſion; as ſoon as the tree fell, all of them, except one, who ſeemed to be a perſon of authority, went away; and in a ſhort time a great number of them were obſerved to draw together into a body among the trees, by a midſhipman, who was one of the party that were on ſhore, and who immediately acquainted the maſter with what he had ſeen, and told him that from the behaviour of the people he imagined an attack was intended: that the maſter made light of the intelligence, and inſtead of repairing immediately to the boat, as he was urged to do, fired one of his piſtols at a mark: that the Indian, who had till that time continued with them, then left them abruptly, and joined the body in the wood: that the maſter, even after this, by an infatuation that is altogether unaccountable, continued to trifle away his time on ſhore, and did not attempt to recover the boat till the attack was begun. Capt. Carteret, being deſirous to get in ſome water, veered the ſhip cloſe to the ſhore, but was himſelf induced to order ſeveral ſhot to be fired, by which many of the Indians ſeem to have been killed before he could attain his purpoſe. This happened on the 15th of Auguſt. Capt. Carteret, in the account of his voyage, ſays, "Hitherto, though I had been long ill of an inflammatory and bilious diſorder, I had been able to keep the deck; but this evening, the ſymptoms became ſo much more threatening that I could keep up no longer, and I was for ſome time afterwards confined to my bed. The maſter was dying of the wounds he received in his quarrel with the Indians; the lieutenant alſo was very ill; the gunner and thirty of my men incapable of duty, among whom were ſeven of the moſt vigorous and healthy, that had been wounded with the maſter, and three of them mortally; and there was no hopes of obtaining ſuch refreſhments as we moſt needed in this place. Theſe were diſcouraging circumſtances, and not only put an end to my hopes of proſecuting the voyage farther to the ſouthward, but greatly diſpirited the people. Except myſelf, the maſter, and the lieutenant, there was nobody on board capable of navigating the ſhip home; the maſter was known to be a dying man, and the recovery of myſelf and the lieutenant was very doubtful. I would, however, have made a farther effort to obtain refreſhments here if I had been furniſhed with any toys, iron tools, or cutlery-ware, which might have enabled me to recover the good-will of the natives, and eſtabliſh a traffic with them for ſuch neceſſaries as they could have furniſhed us with; but I had no ſuch articles, and but very few others fit for an Indian trade, and not being in a condition to riſk the loſs of any more of the few men who were capable of doing duty, I weighed anchor at break of day, on Monday the 17th, and ſtood along the ſhore for that part of the iſland to which I had ſent the cutter. To the iſland I had given the name of Egmont Iſland, in honour of the earl; it certainly is the ſame to which the Spaniards have given the name of Santa Cruz, as appears by the accounts which their writers have given of it, and I called the place in which we had lain Swallow Bay. About ten miles weſt from Swallow Bay is a ſmall iſland, near the coaſt, called Portland's Iſland, and ſtill farther weſt the bay where the cutter had been attacked by the Indians, to which, for that reaſon, we gave the name of Bloody Bay. In this bay is a ſmall rivulet of freſh water, and here we ſaw many houſes regularly built; cloſe to the water-ſide ſtood one much longer than any of the reſt, which ſeemed to be a kind of common-hall, or council-houſe, and was neatly built and thatched. This was the building in which our people had been received, who were on ſhore here with the maſter, and they told me that both the ſides and floor were lined with a kind of fine matting, and a great number of arrows, made up into bundles, were hung up in it ready for uſe. They told me alſo, that at this place there were many fine gardens or plantations, which were encloſed by a fence of ſtone, and planted with cocoa-nut-trees, bananas, plantains, yams, and other vegetables: the cocoa-nut-trees we ſaw from the ſhip, in great numbers among the houſes of the village. About three miles to the weſtward of this town we ſaw another of conſiderable extent, in the front of which, next to the water-ſide, there was a breaſt work of ſtone, about four feet ſix inches high, not in a ſtraight line, but in angles like a fortification; and there is great reaſon to ſuppoſe, from the weapons of theſe people, and their military courage, which muſt in a great meaſure be the effect of habit, that they have frequent wars among themſelves. As we proceeded weſtward from this place, we found, at the diſtance of two or three miles, a ſmall bight, forming a kind of ſmall bay, in which a river empties itſelf. This river we called Granville's River, and to the weſtward of it is a point, to which we gave the name of Ferrers's Point.

From this point the land forms a large bay, and near it is a town of great extent, which ſeemed to ſwarm like a bee-hive: an incredible multitude came out of it as the ſhip paſſed by, holding ſomething in their hands which looked like a wiſp of green graſs, with which they ſeemed to ſtroke each other, at the ſame time dancing or running in a ring. About ſeven miles to the weſtward of Point Ferrars, is another, that was called Carteret's Point, from which a reef of rocks, that appears above water, runs out to the diſtance of about a cable's length. Upon this point we ſaw a large canoe, with an awning or ſhade built over it, and a little to the weſtward another large town, fronted like the laſt: here alſo the people thronged to the beach as the ſhip was paſſing, and performed the ſame kind of circular dance. After a little time, they launched ſeveral canoes, and made towards us; upon which we lay to that they might have time to come up, and we conceived great hopes that we ſhould prevail upon them to come on board, but when they came near enough to have a more diſtinct view of us, they lay upon their paddles and gazed at us, but ſeemed to have no deſign of advancing farther, and therefore we made ſail, and left them behind us. The inhabitants of Egmont Iſland are extremely nimble, vigorous, and active, and ſeem to be as well qualified to live in the water as upon the land, for they were in and out of their canoes almoſt every minute. The canoes that came out againſt us from the weſt end of the iſland might probably, upon occaſion, carry about a dozen men, though three or four manage them with amazing dexterity: we ſaw, however, others of a large ſize upon the beach, with awnings or ſhades over them. We got two of their bows, and a bundle of their arrows, from a canoe; and with theſe weapons they do execution at an incredible diſtance. One of them went through the boat's waſh-board, and dangerouſly wounded a midſhipman in the thigh. Their arrows were pointed with flint, and we ſaw among them no appearance of any metal. The country in general is woody and mountainous, with many vallies intermixed; ſeveral ſmall rivers flow from the interior part of the country into the ſea, and there are many harbours upon the coaſt." Long. 163. 30. to 165. 10. QUILOA, a country and kingdom of Africa, ſituated near the eaſt coaſt, near the mouth of the Coavo : about 60 leagues from north to ſouth, but the extent inland toward the weſt is unknown. This country was firſt diſcovered by the Portugueſe, in the year 1498. The king and his ſubjects are Mahometans ; the latter partly black and partly tawny. They all ſpeak the Arabic and ſeveral other languages, which they learn from the nations they traffic with. Their dreſs is that of the Arabian Turks : the women eſpecially affect finery, with variety of ornaments about their necks, arms, wriſts, and ancles ; particularly bracelets made of ivory, curiouſly wrought, which, upon the death of a parent, huſband, or near relation, they break in pieces, in token of ſorrow, whilſt the men expreſs their's by ſhaving their hair, and abſtaining from food. The capital of the kingdom is ſituated on an iſland near the mouth of the Coavo, and is ſaid to be large, rich, and well built. The houſes are of ſtone and mortar, handſome, and after the Spaniſh manner. They are ſeveral ſtories high, and have each a pleaſant garden behind, well watered and cultivated, here being plenty of ſprings of freſh water. The houſes are finely furniſhed within, and terraces on the top, with a kind of hard clay, and the ſtreets ſo narrow, that one may eaſily ſtep from one ſide to the other. On one ſide of the town is the citadel, where reſides the Mahometan prince. It is adorned with ſtately towers, and ſurrounded with a ditch, and other fortifications. It hath two gates, one towards the port, whence one may ſee the ſhips ſailing in and out, and the other looking towards the ſea. The country about Quiloa, though low, is yet very pleaſant, and fertile in rice and millet, fruits, and good paſture ; ſo that they breed abundance of cattle, beſides poultry of all ſorts, both wild and tame. They have fiſh likewiſe in great plenty, and very good. The climate is likewiſe affirmed by moſt travellers to be very temperate and healthy ; Sanut being the only author we know of who hath ventured to aſſert the contrary in all theſe reſpects. Long. 55. 40. QUITO, a city of South America, and capital of an audience, in the viceroyalty of Terra Firma, ſituated on a mountainous and uneven neck of land, between two plains, near the Andes, about thirty leagues from the Pacific Ocean. The principal ſquare in Quito has four ſides, in one of which ſtands the cathedral, and in the oppoſite the epiſcopal palace; the third ſide is taken up with the town houſe, and the fourth by the palace of the audience. It is very ſpacious, and has in the centre an elegant fountain. Four ſtreets terminating at the angles of the ſquare, are ſtraight, broad, and handſome; but the diſtance of three or four quadras, or ſtacks of buildings, each conſiſting of about 100 yards, begin the troubleſome declivities. Theſe inequalities deprive the inhabitants of the uſe of coaches, or any other wheel carriage. Perſons of rank, however, to diſtinguiſh themſelves, are attended by ſlaves ſupporting a large umbrella, and ladies of quality are carried in ſedan chairs. All the ſtreets, except the four above-mentioned, are crooked, and deſtitute both of ſymmetry and order. Some of them are croſſed by breaches, and the houſes ſtand on the ſides of their winding courſe and irregular projections. Thus ſome parts of the city are ſituated in the bottom of thoſe breaches, and others on their ſummits. The principal ſtreets are paved, but the others not, by which means they are almoſt impaſſable after rain, which is here very common. Beſides the principal ſquare, there are two others in Quito, and both very ſpacious, together with ſeveral others that are ſmaller. In theſe the greateſt part of the convents are ſituated, and make a handſome appearance, the fronts and portals being adorned with all the embelliſhments of architecture. The principal houſes are very large, and ſome of them have ſpacious and well-contrived apartments, though none are above one ſtory in height, though ſeldom without a balcony towards the ſtreet. The materials made uſe of in building at Quito, are adobes, or unburnt bricks, and clay; and to the making the former the earth is ſo well adapted that they laſt a long time, provided they are defended from the rain. They are cemented or joined together by a certain adheſive compoſition, called ſangagua, a ſpecies of mortar, of uncommon hardneſs, uſed by the ancient Indians in building their houſes. The city contains ſeven pariſh churches, ſeveral convents, and an univerſity. It was erected into a biſhopric in the year 1545. Here is a treaſury for the effects of perſons deceaſed; an inſtitution long ſince eſtabliſhed in various parts of America, for receiving the effects of thoſe whoſe lawful heirs were in Spain, that they may be ſecured from thoſe accidents to which they would, from diſhoneſty or negligence, be liable in private hands, and ſafely kept for the perſons to whom they properly belong: an inſtitution originally very excellent, but ſaid to be often abuſed. Quito is very populous, and has among its inhabitants ſome families of high rank and diſtinction, though their number is but ſmall, conſidering its extent, the poorer claſs bearing here too great a proportion. The former are the deſcendants either of the original conquerors, or of preſidents, auditors, or other perſons of character, who at different times came over from Spain, inveſted with ſome lucrative poſt, and have ſtill preſerved their luſtre both of wealth and deſcent by intermarriages, without intermixing with meaner families, though famous for their riches. The commonalty may be divided into four claſſes: Spaniards or whites, Meſtizoes, Indians or natives, and negroes; the laſt are not ſo numerous, in proportion, as in other parts of America; occaſioned by the inconvenience of bringing them to Quito, and the different branches of agricultu being performed by Indians. The whites make up one-ſixth part of th inhabitants; the Meſtizoes a third part; the Indians one-ſixth; and ca of different kinds one-third. Theſe four claſſes, according to the mo authentic accounts taken from the pariſh regiſters, amount to betwee 50,000 and 60,000 perſons, of all ages, ſexes, and ranks. The me whether Creoles, Spaniards, or Meſtizoes, are well made, of a proper ſta ture, and of a lively agreeable countenance. The Indians, both men an women, are generally low, but well proportioned, and very ſtrong. O of the common liquors drank in this country is mate, which anſwers to th tea of China, from an herb called paraguay, from its growing in that coun try. Quito is ſo happily ſituated, that neither the heat nor cold are trou bleſome, though the extremes of both may be felt in the neighbourhood. Bu what renders this equality ſtill more delightful, is, that it is conſtant through out the whole year, the difference between the ſeaſons being ſcarce perceivable The winds are healthy, and blow continually, but never with any violence Their uſual ſituations are north and ſouth, though they ſometimes ſhift t other quarters, without any regard to the ſeaſon of the year. Their inceſ ſant blowing, notwithſtanding their frequent variations, preſerves the coun try from any violent or even diſagreeable impreſſions of the rays of th ſun. So that, were it not for ſome diſagreeable circumſtances, this countr might be conſidered as the moſt happy ſpot on the whole earth. But whe theſe are known, all its beauties ſeem concealed under the cloud of diſap pointment: for here are dreadful tempeſts of thunder and lightning, an ſtill more dreadful earthquakes, which often ſurpriſe the inhabitants in th midſt of ſecurity. The whole morning, and generally till two in th afternoon, the weather is extremely delightful; a bright ſun, with a ſere and clear ſky, are commonly ſeen; but afterwards the vapours begin t thicken, the whole atmoſphere is filled with thick clouds, which bring o ſuch ſhocking tempeſts of thunder and lightning, that all the neighbourin mountains tremble, and the city too often feels their dreadful effects. Laſtl the clouds diſcharge themſelves in ſuch impetuous torrents of rain, that i a very ſhort time the ſtreets appear like rivers, and the ſquares, though ſitu ated on a ſlope, like lakes. This dreadful ſcene generally continues ti near ſun-ſet, when the weather clears up, and nature again appears beautiful as in the morning. Sometimes, indeed, the rains continue a night, and they have been known to laſt three or four days ſucceſſively and on the contrary, three or four days of fine weather ſometimes ſuccee one another. Earthquakes cannot be conſidered as leſs terrible than an of the former, and if not ſo common as in other cities of America, ye they are too frequent, and very often violent, hardly a year paſſing witho one or two being felt, many houſes thrown down, and their inhabitan buried under their ruins. The perennial beauty and pleaſantneſs of th country round the city of Quito, can hardly be equalled in any other par of the known world. The remarkable fertility of the ſoil is naturall productive of a great plenty of fruits and corn of various kinds, and a the ſame time renders them perfectly good; and this is evident from th delicacy of the beef, veal, mutton, pork, and poultry of Quito. Here i alſo wheat-bread in ſufficient plenty; but the Indian women, who generally make it, being ignorant of the beſt methods, it is not equal to tha of Europe. This, however, is not owing to the wheat, which is excellent and the bread made in private houſes equal to any in the known world Theſe various productions, together with its manufactures, are the ſource of the commerce of Quito, which is principally carried on by European ſome of whom are ſettled here, and others come occaſionally. The latt purchaſe the country goods, and ſell thoſe of Europe. The manufacture of this province are cottons, bays, and cloths, all which find a good market at Lima, for ſupplying all the inland provinces of Peru. The return are made partly in ſilver, and partly in wine, brandy, oil, copper, tin, lead and quickſilver. The maſters of the manufactures either ſell their goo to the traders, or employ them as factors to diſpoſe of them. On the arrival of the galleons at Carthagena, theſe traders reſort thither, to purcha European goods, which at their return, they conſign to their correſponden all over the province. Long. 61. 44. QUITO (Audience of), a province of South America, in the govern ment of Terra Firma, bounded on the north by Popayan, on the eaſt b the Portugueſe dominions, in Braſil, on the ſouth by the juriſdiction o Piuza and Chacapoyas, in Peru, and by countries unknown, and on th weſt by the Pacific Ocean; its extent is not well known; Don Ulloa give it 600 leagues from eaſt to weſt, and 200 from north to ſouth; but th meaſurement includes a great ſpace not known to the Spaniards. Qui was at one time governed by its own king, till it was annexed by co queſt to Peru, a little before the Spaniards entered America. After th conqueſt by the Spaniards, it was annexed to Peru; but a new viceroyal being erected at Santa Fé de Bogota, the capital of the new kingdom Grenada, it was diſmembered from Peru, and annexed to Grenada. has been annexed to Terra Firma. This province conſiſts of nine juri dictions, viz. San Miguel de Ibarra, Otabala, Quito, Latacunga, Rioba ba, Chiombo or Guaranda, Guayaquil, Cuença, and Loja. The juriſdi tion of Quito conſiſts of twenty-five pariſhes, beſides thoſe in the city and though called cinco leguas, five leagues, extends, in ſome parts, a great deal farther, and the lands are as it were covered with plantations, ſome ſituated in the plains, ſome in the capacious breaches, and others on the ſummit of the mountains, and all producing according to the quality, ſituation, and expoſure of the ground. Thoſe on the temperate plains yield plentiful harveſts of maize; thoſe at the bottoms of deep breaches, being in a hot temperature, are planted with ſugar-canes, from whence they extract great quantities of ſugar and rum. From the fruits peculiar to ſuch a temperature, are made a variety of ſweetmeats, here called rayados; and of which there is a great conſumption among the inhabitants. The ſugar cane ripens very ſlowly in this juriſdiction: for though the plantations enjoy a hot air, yet it is not of that degree of heat requiſite to its ſpeedy maturity; ſo that it is three years after they are planted before they are fit to be cut. Nor are they ever cut but once, tha ſecond crop only producing the ſoca or germ, which ſerves for replanting. The plantations near the ſummits of the mountains, from their having a variety of temperatures, produce wheat, barley, legumes, and potatoes. Above theſe plantations are fed numerous flocks of ſheep, producing that wool, which from the ſeveral operations, affords employment for multitudes of people. This juriſdiction has no general temperature, the degree of cold and heat depending on the ſituation: and to this difference is owing the delightful, and even profitable variety of all kinds of fruits and grains, each finding here a temperature agreeable to its nature. Accordingly, in travelling only half a day, you paſs from a climate where the heat ſufficiently indicates that you are in the torrid zone, to another where you feel all the horrors of winter. And what is ſtill more ſingular, and may be eſteemed an advantage, no change occurs during the whole year, the temperate parts never feeling the viciſſitudes of cold and heat. This, however, muſt be allowed not to hold preciſely with regard to the mountainous parts, the coldneſs of which is encreaſed by the violence of the winds, or a change of weather, called tiempo de paramos, when the clouds involve the greateſt part of theſe mountains, and precipitate themſelves in a ſleet; at which time the cold becomes intolerable: and, on the other hand, when theſe freezing clouds are diſperſed, and the wind allayed, ſo that the rays of the ſun reach the earth, they feel the comfortable heat of his cheering beams. Moſt of theſe villages are built with very little regularity. The principal part of them is the church and parſonage, which they call the convent, from the prieſts being all formerly religious. Theſe ſtructures have ſome appearance of decency; but the other parts of the village conſiſt of a number of huts, with mud-walls, ſcattered all over the country, where every one has his ſpot of ground, which he tills for his ſubſiſtence. A great part, and in ſome villages the whole of the inhabitants are Indians, who live there when out of place; though in ſome parts the inhabitants are Meſtizos, and here and there a Spaniſh family; but theſe are extremely poor.

QUITOOPOA, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Georgia. Long. 89. 58. W. Greenwich. Lat. 33. 27. N.

QUIXOS, a juriſdiction of South America, in the audience of Quito, bounded on the north by Popayan, on the ſouth and weſt by the juriſdiction of Quito, and on the eaſt by the river Aquarico. The inhabitants of this government are obliged to be continually on their guard againſt the wild Indians, who frequently commit depredations in their villages and plantations. Theſe Indians are very numerous, conſiſting of many nations, and are ſo diſperſed all over the country, that every village is under continual apprehenſions. The temperature of this government is very hot and moiſt, the rains being almoſt continual. The country is covered with thick woods, and in ſome parts are trees of a prodigious magnitude. In the ſouthern parts of the juriſdiction is the Canella, or cinnamon-tree, and great quantities of the bark are every year ſent into the neighbouring provinces. It is not equal in flavour to that of Ceylon, in the Eaſt Indies, perhaps for want of knowing the true method of preparing it; but reſembles it in every particular, the ſmell, colour, and appearance, both externally and internally, being the ſame. The leaf is alſo the ſame, and has all the delicate ſmell of the bark; but the flowers and ſeed ſurpaſs even thoſe of Ceylon. The plains produce great quantities of fruits, roots, and corn.

QUIZAMA, a province of Africa, in the ſouthern part of Angola. The country is extenſive, full of mountains, and badly cultivated, but produces abundance of honey, wax, and ſalt. The inhabitants are warlike, and have not ſubmitted to the Portugueſe.

RAAB, or Gyor, a town and fortreſs of Hungary, ſituated in a pleaſant level country, at the conflux of the Danube, the Raab, and Rabnitz, by which it is ſurrounded. Its houſes are all of ſtone, the ſtreets are large and ſtraight. It is the ſee of a biſhop. It is fortified with ſeven baſtions, and has always a ſtrong garriſon, well provided with military ſtores. There are yet to be ſeen ſome Roman antiquities. The fortifications of the city and caſtle are chiefly the works of the emperors Ferdinand I. and Maximilian II. In 1529, the garriſon abandoned the city, out of fear of the Turks, having firſt ſet fire to the caſtle. In 1566, it was burnt down. In 1594, it was by agreement given up to the Turks, but in 1698, count Adolphus, of Schwartzenberg, recovered it again by ſtratagem: 28 miles SSE. Preſburg, and 56 SE. Vienna. Long. 35. 18. E. RABAT, a town of Africa, in the empire of Morocco, on the coaſt of the Atlantic, near the mouth of the river oppoſite Salée. Theſe two places are ſo near each other that they ought not to be ſeparated. As they are united by the ſame intereſts, they for ſome time formed a kind of union, and were governed by the ſame magiſtrates; and it is only within theſe forty years that the emperor has aboliſhed this form of government. There has been formerly, and at intervals, a number of European factories at Rabat; but the difficulty of navigating the river, the obſtacles ariſing from the arbitrary power of the ſovereign, and the diſpoſition and prejudices of the Moors, have diſguſted the Europeans. Rabat is, however, the moſt proper place for trade of any upon this coaſt, both for its vicinity to Europe, and the quantity of wool, leather, and wax it is capable of furniſhing. At Rabat, near the mouth of the river, are to be ſeen the ruins of a caſtle, built by Jacob Almonſor, or Al-Manſor, in the 12th century. The walls are near two miles round, and fortified by ſquare towers. They encloſe the caſtle, the town of Rabat, and a large ſpace of ground, where Jacob Almanſor built beautiful palaces, and laid out delightful gardens, watered by plentiful ſtreams, which he brought from the neighbouring ſpring These walls, as well as the palace and the town, were built by Spaniſh ſlaves, whom he took priſoners in his firſt campaign.

RAGUSA (Republic of), a ſmall republic, or ariſtocratic ſtate of Europe, containing a part of Dalmatia, the conſtitution of which is formed on the model of that of Venice. The government is in the hands of the nobility, who are at preſent greatly diminiſhed : and the chief of the republic, who is ſtyled rector, is changed every month, and elected by ſcrutiny, or lot. During his adminiſtration he lives in the palace, wears a ducal habit, namely, a long ſilk robe with white ſleeves, and his ſalary is five ducats a month ; but if he be one of the pregadi, and aſſiſt at appeals, he receives a ducat per diem. Next to him is il conſiglio de i dieci or the council of ten. In the conſiglio grande, or great council, all noblemen above 20 years of age are admitted ; and in this council alſo are choſen the perſons who conſtitute the board of the pregadi. Theſe laſt ſuperintend all affairs civil and military, diſpoſe of all employments, and receive and ſend envoys. They continue a year in office. Il conſiglietto, or the little council, conſiſts of thirty nobles, who look to the polity, trade, and revenues of the ſtate, and decide appeals of ſmall value. Five proveditors confirm, by a majority of votes, the proceedings of the adminiſtration. Civil cauſes, and thoſe more particularly relating to debts, are firſt heard before ſix ſenators, or conſuls, from whom there lies an appeal to the college of thirty ; and from them again, in particular caſes, to the council. In criminal caſes, ſpecial judges are appointed. There are alſo three commiſſioners appointed for the woollen trade ; a board of health, conſiſting of five nobles, whoſe care it is to preſerve the city from all contagious diſtempers ; and four patrons of eminence manage the taxes, exciſe, and mint. The revenues of the republic are ſaid to have amounted formerly to about 120,000 francs ; but being unable to defend themſelves, they have procured them ſeveral protectors, the chief of whom is the grand Signior. It is ſaid of them that they pay tribute to the Turks out of fear ; to the Venetians out of hatred ; to the pope, emperor, Spain, and Naples out of reſpect and political views. The tribute to the Porte, with the expences of the annual embaſſy, is about 20,000 ſequins. The Turks are very ſerviceable to them, bringing hither all kinds of neceſſaries, eſpecially fire-arms and military ſtores. They keep ſo watchful an eye over their freedom, that the gates of the city of Raguſa are allowed to be open only a few hours in the day. They wholly profeſs the Roman Catholic religion, but the Greek, Armenian, and Turkiſh perſuaſions are tolerated for conveniency. The language chiefly in uſe among the Raguſians is Sclavonian, but the greater part of them ſpeak alſo the Italian. The citizens are almoſt to a man all traders, and this place diſtinguiſhes itſelf by the fineneſs of its manufactures. Silk is allowed to be worn here only by the rector, the nobiles, and the doctores. Its territory is but ſmall, and contains only four towns and a few ſmall iſlands in the Adriatic. Raguſa is the capital.

RAGUSA, a ſea port town of Dalmatia, and capital of the ſtate to which it gives name. The ancient Raguſa was built long before the birth of Chriſt. It became afterwards a Roman colony, and was demoliſhed in the third century by the Scythians. It was anciently called Epidaurus. The new city was built, on the demolition of the old, in the place where it now ſtands, being enlarged from time to time. In former days it was called Rauſis, or Rauſa, but at preſent is ſtyled Pabrovika by the Turks, and Dobronich by the Sclavonians. It is not very large in circumference, but is nevertheleſs well built, being the ſeat of a republic, and an archbiſhop's ſee. It extends towards the ſea, and both the city and harbour are defended by fort St. Lorenzo. Were the rock of Chiroma, which lies in the ſea, and belongs to the Venetians, fortified, it would be impregnable. The air is wholeſome, but the ſoil ſo barren, that the inhabitants receive the greateſt part of their neceſſaries from the neighbouring Turkiſh provinces. The circumjacent iſlands are all fertile, pleaſant, well inhabited, and embelliſhed with fine towns, ſtately palaces, and beautiful gardens. The city is very much ſubject to earthquakes, from which it has more than once ſuffered incredible damages, eſpecially in the years 1634, and 1667, in the latter of which ſix thouſand men were deſtroyed. A great fire too breaking out at the ſame time, the place was ſo demoliſhed that it did not thoroughly recover it for twenty years afterwards : 248 miles NW. Salonіki, and 110 S. Serajo. Long. 36. 4. E. Ferro. Lat. 42. 58. N.

REVEL, a ſea-port town of Ruſſia, on the Baltic, and capital of a province, the ſee of a Lutheran biſhop, ſuffragan to the archbiſhop of Riga. Though not very large, it is an opulent city, and well fortified: and is a place of a conſiderable trade. In the year 1218, both the town and caſtle were founded by Waldemar II. king of Denmark, on the ſame place where his anceſtors had built the convent of St. Michael, which, in 1310, was included within its walls. This town, as well as the whole duchy of Eſthonia, received moſt of its privileges from the Daniſh kings; and the arms of Denmark, with inſcriptions in the Daniſh language, are ſtill ſeen in the churches and other public edifices. The houſes are moſtly of brick, and well built; but the ſtreets are ſomething irregular. The only churches or congregations here, beſides thoſe of the Ruſſian church, are Lutherans. The tolls or cuſtoms of this town are conſiderable; of which the magiſtracy have a part, and the reſt belongs to the crown. Revel has its own arſenal; and maintains a number of matroſſes, and a company of ſoldiers. This city formerly made no inconſiderable figure among the Hanſe-towns; and is ſtill a ſtaple-town, and has a flouriſhing trade. Its harbour is convenient and ſpacious; and a part of the Ruſſian fleet uſually lies in it. The town is ſurrounded with high walls, ſtrengthened with baſtions, and a deep ditch; and for its further ſecurity, is fortified with a caſtle, which ſtands on a rock, and is embelliſhed with ſeveral towers. The citizens have very pleaſant gardens without the walls. King Waldemar II. erected this city into a biſhop's ſee. Revel was totally deſtroyed by fire in the year 1433; and in 1710, ſurrendered to Peter the Great, who not only confirmed its former privileges, but reſtored ſeveral others, of which the crown of Sweden had deprived it: 144 miles N. RHINE (Circle of the Lower), a diviſion of Germany, bounded by t circles of Weſtphalia, Upper Rhine, Franconia, and Swabia, by the duch of Luxemburg and France. Its real extent is hard to be determined but in conjunction with the circle of the Upper Rhine, it amounts to abo 960 ſquare German miles. The ſtates of this circle are the electors Mentz, Treves, and Cologn, together with the Palatine, the duke of Arem berg, the prince of Taxis, the Teutonic bailiwic of Coblentz, the prin of Naſſau-Dietz, on account of the ſeigniory of Beilſtein; the elector Treves, on account of Lower Iſenburg and the count of Sinzendorf, account of the burggraviate of Rheineck. The immediacy of the to of Gelnhauſen is diſputed. The ſummoning-prince and director of t circle is the elector of Mentz. The diets of the circle have ever ſince t middle of the 17th century been held at Frankfort on the Mayn. theſe diets the ſtates of the circle ſit and vote in the order they ſtand, far only that the electors of Treves and Cologn exchange places, though the former always gives his voice firſt, and that the elector of Mentz, as director, gives his voice laſt. This circle is one of thoſe which are called the anterior circles, and which, in the years 1697 and 1702, entered into a mutual compact with each other for their defence againſt the attacks of an enemy. It has alſo continued conſtantly in this compact, and appointed its quota in horſe and foot. This quota, as well as the contribution of the circle to the determined aid of the empire, has generally been equal to that of the circle of the Upper Rhine. With reſpect to religion, this circle is reckoned among the mixed.

RHINE (Circle of the Upper). This circle is bounded by the circles of the Lower Rhine, Weſtphalia, Upper and Lower Saxony, Swabia, and Franconia, and by that part of France heretofore called Alſace and Lorraine, in the latter of which were ſome lands belonging to this circle: the extent is mentioned in the circle of the Lower Rhine. The ſtates belonging to this circle are the biſhoprics of Worms and Spire, with the provoſtſhip of Weiſſenburg, Straſburg, Bâle, and Fulda, and the commandery of the order of St. John, as alſo the princely abby of Prum, with the provoſtſhip of Odenheim, and the electoral Palatinate of Simmern, Lautern, and Veldenz, the palatinate of Deuxponts, Heſſe-Caſſel, Heſſe-Darmſtadt, Hersfeld, or Hirſchfeld, and Sponheim, as alſo the marggraviates of Nomeny, Salm, with Kirburg, Naſſau-Weilburg, Naſſau-Uſingen, Naſſau-Idſtein, Naſſau-Saarbrucken, and Otweiler, with thoſe of Waldeck, Hanau-Munzenburg, Hanau-Lichtenburg, Solms-Hohenſolms, Solms-Braunſels, Solms-Rodolheim, Solms-Laubach, and the electorate of Mentz, on account of Konigſtein; that of Stolberg, on account of Konigſtein, thoſe of Iſenburg-Birſtein, Iſenburg-Budingen, Wachterſbach, and Meerholz, Grewiler, Grumbach, Dhaun, Leiningen-Hartenburg, Leiningen-Weſterburg, and Grunſtadt, Munzfelden, Witgenſtein of Witgenſtin, Witgenſtein-Berleburg, Falkenſtein, Reipolzkirchen, Creange, Wartenberg, Bretzenheim, Dachſtuhl, and Ollbruck, and the imperial cities of Worms, Spire, Franckfort, Friedberg, and Wetzlar. The biſhop of Worms, and the elector Palatine, for the duchy of Simmern, are ſummoning princes of this circle. The diets of the circle of the Upper Rhine were formerly held at Worms, but in this century at Frankfurt; but the chancery circle of the archives belonging to it are kept at the directory at Worms. This circle, with reſpect to its religion, is reckoned among the mixed, and to the chamber-judicatory actually preſents at preſent two aſſeſſors.

RHINE (The Lower), a department of France, bounded on the north by the palatinate of the Rhine, the duchy of Deux Ponts and the department of the Moſelle, on the eaſt by the Rhine, on the ſouth by the department of the Lower Rhine, and on the weſt by the departments of the Voſges, the Meurte, and the Moſelle, 70 miles in length from north to ſouth, and 22 in its mean breadth. This department was, before the revolution, the northern part of Alſace. Straſburgh is the capital.

RHINE (Upper), a department of France, bounded on the north by the department of the Lower Rhine, on the ſouth by Swiſſerland, and on the weſt by the departments of the Upper Saône and Voſges; about 50 miles from north to ſouth, and 27 from eaſt to weſt. Before the revolution, it was the ſouth part of Alſace. Colmar is the capital.

RHO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Milan, on the Colona: 8 miles W. Milan.

RHODE ISLAND, a ſtate of United America, bounded on the north and eaſt by the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts, on the ſouth by the ſea, and on the weſt by Connecticut. This diſtrict was firſt peopled by ſome inhabitants who left the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts, on account of the religious diſputes about the years 1634, 1635, and 1636. The firſt ſettlement was formed in Providence, on lands purchaſed of the Indians, under the auſpices of Mr. Roger Williams, who had been baniſhed for holding heretical opinions. In the year 1643, the people being deſtitute of a patent, or any legal authority, Mr. Williams went to England as agent, and by the aſſiſtance of ſir Henry Vane, jun. obtained of the earl of Warwick (then governor and admiral of the plantations) and his council, 'a free and abſolute charter of civil incorporation, by the name of the Incorporation of Providence Plantations in Narraganſett Bay.' This laſted until the charter granted by Charles II. in the year 1663, by which the incorporation was ſtyled 'The Engliſh Colony of Rhode Iſland and Providence Plantations in New England.' This charter, without any eſſential alteration, has remained the foundation of their government ever ſince. In the year 1730, the colony was filled with inhabitants; and chiefly by the natural increaſe of the firſt ſettlers. The number of ſouls in the ſtate, at this time was 17,935, of which no more than 985 were Indians, and 1648 negroes. In the year 1738 there were above one hundred ſail of veſſels belonging to Newport. The colony of Rhode Iſland, from its local ſituation, has ever been leſs expoſed to the incurſions of the neighbouring Indians, and from the French from Canada, than their neighbours in Maſſachuſetts and Connecticut. Many of the colony have, from its firſt eſtabliſhment, profeſſed the principles of the Quakers, which forbad them to fight. For theſe reaſons, the colony has been very little concerned in the old wars with the French and Indians. In the expedition againſt Port Royal, in the year 1710, and in the abortive attempt againſt Canada, in the year 1711, they had ſome troops; and towards the intended expedition againſt Canada, in the year 1746, they raiſed 300 men, and equipped a ſloop of war with 100 ſeamen; but, in their voyage to Nova Scotia, they met with misfortunes and returned. Soon after the deſign was dropped. Through the whole of the late war with Great Britain, the inhabitants of this ſtate have manifeſted a patriotic ſpirit; their troops have behaved gallantly, and they are honoured in having produced the ſecond general in the field. The conſtitution of this ſtate is founded on the charter granted by Charles II. in the fourteenth year of his reign; and the frame of government was eſſentially altered by the revolution. The legiſlature of the ſtate conſiſts of two branches: a ſenate, or upper-houſe, compoſed of ten members, called in the charter, aſſiſtants; and a houſe of repreſentatives, compoſed of deputies from the ſeveral towns. The members of the legiſlature are choſen twice a year; and there are two ſeſſions of this body annually, viz. on the firſt Wedneſday in May, and the laſt Wedneſday in October. The ſupreme executive power is veſted in a governor, or, in his abſence, in the deputy-governor, who are choſen annually in May, by the ſuffrages of the people. The governor preſides in the upper houſe, but has only a ſingle voice in enacting laws. There is one ſupreme judicial court, compoſed of five judges, whoſe juriſdiction extends over the whole ſtate, and who hold two courts annually in each county. In each county there is an inferior court of common pleas and general ſeſſions of the peace, held twice a year, for the trial of cauſes, not capital, ariſing within the county, from which an appeal lies to the ſupreme court. The juſtice of the peace, as in other ſtates have cognizance of ſmall cauſes, and ſince the revolution, their powers have been enlarged to a dangerous extent. In the rivers and bays are plenty of ſheeps-head, black-fiſh, herring, ſhad, lobſters, oyſters, and clams, and around the ſhores of Rhode Iſland, beſides thoſe already mentioned, are cod, halibut, mackerel, baſs, haddock, &c. &c. to the amount of more than ſeventy different kinds. This ſtate, generally ſpeaking, is a country for paſture, and not for grain. It, however, produces wheat, rye, barley, oats, and flax, and culinary plants and roots in great variety and abundance. Its natural growth is the ſame as in the other New England ſtates. The weſtern and north-weſtern parts of the ſtate are but thinly inhabited, and are barren and rocky. The people are generally farmers, and raiſe great numbers of the fineſt and largeſt neat-cattle in America. They keep large dairies, and make butter and cheeſe of the beſt quality, and in large quantities for exportation. Narraganſett is famed for an excellent breed of pacing horſes; they are ſtrong, and remarkable for their ſpeed, and for their excellency in enduring the fatigues of a long journey. The preſent exports from the ſtate are flax-ſeed, lumber, horſes, cattle, fiſh, poultry, onions, cheeſe, barley, &c. The imports, conſiſting of European and Weſt India goods, and log-wood from the Bay of Honduras, exceed the exports. About 600 veſſels enter and clear annually at the different ports in this ſtate.

RHODE ISLAND, an iſland, from which the American ſtate takes its name, is ſituated in the Atlantic Ocean, near the coaſt of Maſſachuſetts, about 40 miles ſouth-weſt from Boſton. It is about 13 miles from north to ſouth, and 4 miles wide, and is divided into three townſhips, Newport, Portſmouth, and Middleton. It is a noted reſort for invalids from ſouthern climates. The iſland is exceedingly pleaſant and healthful; and is celebrated for its fine women. Travellers, with propriety, call it the Eden of America. It ſuffered much by the late war. Some of its moſt ornamental country ſeats were deſtroyed, and their fine groves, orchards, and fruit-trees, wantonly cut down. The ſoil is of a ſuperior quality. Before the war, 30,000 ſheep commonly fed upon this iſland; and one year there were 37,000. In the year 1780, there were ſcarcely 3000. They have increaſed ſince. Long. 71. 20. W. RHODEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and county of Waldeck: 24 miles NNW. Waldeck, and 20 SSE. Paderborn.

RHODES, an iſland in the Mediterranean, near the coaſt of Natolia, much celebrated in ancient hiſtory. The government was always republican. At firſt, the ſupreme authority was lodged with the people. The nobles afterwards got poſſeſſion of it, and formed an ariſtocracy. Alcibiades, at the head of a numerous fleet, rendered them ſubject to the Athenians; but the republic entering into an alliance with the inhabitants of Byzantium and Chio, ſhook off that yoke. Mauſoleus made himſelf maſter of Rhodes, by ſtratagem, and eſtabliſhed a tyranny. Artemiſia, his queen, making uſe of a like artifice, cut off ſome of the principal inhabitants. But the Rhodians expelled their tyrants. Antigonus, irritated at not having been able to detach them from the alliance of Ptolemy, king of Egypt, declared war againſt them. He made immenſe preparations, and ſent his ſon, Demetrius, to ſubdue the iſland. That prince, excellently ſkilled in the art of taking towns, beſieged Rhodes by ſea and land. To reduce it, he invented new machines. The ſtrongeſt tower of Rhodes, and great part of the wall, were thrown down; but the courage of a free people triumphed over the fleet of Demetrius. Mithridates, who ſo long withſtood the fortune of the Romans, and conquered Greece and the iſlands of the Archipelago, failed in his attempts on Rhodes. Caius Caſſius took it during the civil wars, and deſpoiled it of a part of its treaſures. Nevertheleſs, the republic again glorioully reared its head, and the ſervices rendered the Romans by the Rhodians, procured them both their liberty and new towns in Caria. In fine, ever obſervant of their laws, and careful to maintain the commerce to which they owed their power, they remained independent till the reign of Veſpaſian, who firſt reduced their iſland to a Roman province. Since that time Rhodes has been only one of the fineſt iſles of the Archipelago: the power and riches of the inhabitants have diſappeared. Under Conſtantine, this iſland remained a part of the eaſtern empire, which was greatly weakened by its diviſion. The puſillanimity and vices of the princes who ſucceeded, ſhook it to its foundation. The Arabs, led on by the enthuſiaſm which Mahomet had inſpired, invading and giving battle in the name of the Almighty, conquered the fineſt provinces of the empire; and, in the twelfth year of the reign of Conſtans, Moawiah, Othman's lieutenant, made himſelf maſter of Rhodes. The Greek emperors, however, at length expelled the Mahometans, and kept poſſeſſion till the time of Baldwin, who becoming ſovereign of Conſtantinople, ſent a prefect to Rhodes. Some time after, John Ducas conquered it. The brave warriors, then known by the name of the Knights of St. John, led on by their grand-maſter, Foques de Villaret, attacked and took it, after a bloody battle, in which heroiſm triumphed over numbers and valour. Mahomet the ſecond who made the Chriſtian world tremble, and [illegible] ed to have enchained victory to his car, tarniſhed the luſtre of his laurels by beſieging this place, defended by a handful of heroes. In the year 1552, Soliman ſaw a numerous army periſh under its walls: and if this redoubtable conqueror of Hungary and Perſia, did at length ſubdue Rhodes, attacked as it was on all ſides by the forces of the Turks, the greater was the ſhame for the Chriſtian princes who did not ſend a ſingle veſſel to the aid of its intrepid defenders. Deſtroyed rather than vanquiſhed, they were almoſt buried under the ruins of their forts. Soliman could not enter the town but through torrents of the blood of his ſoldiers. He found it nothing but heaps of ruins defended by a ſmall number of knights, covered with wounds, who afterwards removed to Malta. A pacha is the governor-general of the iſland. He poſſeſſes abſolute power; and preſides at once over civil juſtice and military diſcipline. All private litigations are decided before the tribunal of the judge, called the cadi. His deciſions are without appeal. The Greeks and Jews have a chief, named the Mouteveli, who is their intendant-general, and has the regulation of the tax, called carach, a capitation-tax, impoſed by the grand ſeignior on all his ſubjects who are not Mahometans, but which is paid only by the men. The ſoil of Rhodes is dry and ſandy; but the numerous ſprings which water it, render it extremely fertile. Corn thrives there admirably. Its yellow and heavy grain affords a flour as white as ſnow, which makes excellent bread. If half of the country capable of growing it, were cultivated, the Rhodians would have far more than ſufficient for their conſumption, and might export to foreign countries. The number of families in the whole iſland is eſtimated at 4700 Turks, 2500 Greeks, and 100 Jews, in all 7300, or about 36,500 inhabitants; a ſmall population for an iſland 30 leagues in circumference.

RHODES, a city of Aſia, and capital of the iſland of Rhodes, built by Hippodamus, a famous architect, of Miletus, three leagues in circumference: the beauty of its harbours, ſays Strabo, of its ſtreets and walls, and the magnificence of its monuments, render it ſo much ſuperior to all other cities, as to admit of no compariſon. The celebrated coloſſus of Rhodes, dedicated to the ſun, was the work of Chares of Lindus, a pupil of Lyſippus, and was ſeventy cubits high; it was thrown down by an earthquake, 56 years after it was firſt erected. It is ſaid to have coſt 300 talents, a ſum which the Rhodians gained by the ſale of the warlike engines left by Demetrius when he raiſed the ſiege. Moawiah, the general of the caliph Othman, when he took Rhodes, deſtroyed the ſtatue, and ſold the broken pieces to a Jew of Edeſſa, near 900 years after its fall: neither did the other arts flouriſh leſs in this renowned city. Their ſchools too attained ſo high a degree of celebrity, that they were reſorted to by ſome of the greateſt men of Rome; among whom were Marcus Brutus, Cicero, Cato, Caſſius, Cæſar, and Pompey: Alexander, who regarded this city as the firſt in the univerſe, choſe there to depoſit his laſt will. The modern town, built on the ruins of the ancient city, occupies only a quarter of its extent, and poſſeſſes no remarkable antiquities. Not even the ſmalleſt remains of the theatre, temples, and portico, are to be diſcovered. Statues, coloſſuſes, paintings, all have been deſtroyed, or carried off. To wide and ſkilfully diſpoſed ſtreets; to thoſe regularly ranged edifices, where each front preſented the ſame order of architecture, have ſucceeded narrow and winding lanes, and houſes without taſte, regularity, or decoration. The knights of Rhodes have left various traces of their reſidence in the iſland. Their armorial enſigns, and ſome buſts of the grand maſters, ſculptured in relief, on marble, decorated the fronts of ſeveral buildings. The walls and towers they erected ſtill ſubſiſt, and bear the glorious marks of their obſtinate defence. The church of St John has been converted into a moſque. The vaſt hoſpital, in which Chriſtian charity received the faithful from all parts of the world, and furniſhed them with ſuccours, at this day ſerves as a granary for the Turks. Rhodes has only two harbours. The ſmalleſt faces the eaſt, and is called Darca. Rocks, at a ſmall diſtance from each other, in the front, block the entrance, and only leave room for one veſſel to paſs. Moles raiſed on each ſide defend it from the wind. The Turks, who ſince the conqueſt of the iſland, have not removed from it a ſingle grain of ſand, ſuffer it gradually to choak up. There is only water enough for merchant ſhips, and even they are obliged to unload a part of their cargo before they can enter it. The other harbour is large; it bears the name of Rhodes; and in this frigates of thirty guns may anchor. Veſſels are here defended from the weſterly winds, which in theſe latitudes, prevail nine months in the year. Long. 45. 32. E. Ferro. Lat. 36. 25. N.

RICHMOND, a rich and populous village of England, in the county of Surry, ſituated on the ſide of the Thames. It was anciently called Sheen, and had a royal palace, in which Edward I. II. and III. reſided ; the laſt died here of grief for the death of his ſon, the Black Prince. Richard II. alſo reſided here, but being diſguſted with the place, on the death of the queen, afterwards deſerted it, and let it run to decay. Henry V. repaired it, and founded three religious houſes near it. In the year 1497, this palace was deſtroyed by fire, when king Henry VII. was there ; but in 1501, that prince cauſed it to be new built, and commanded that the village ſhould be called Richmond ; he having borne the title of the Earl of Richmond, before he obtained the crown, by the defeat and death of Richard III. Henry VII. died here, and here alſo his grand daughter, queen Elizabeth, breathed her laſt. The preſent palace, which is finely ſituated, is a very plain edifice, built by the duke of Ormond, who received a grant of a conſiderable ſpace of land about Richmond, from king William III. as a reward for his military ſervices ; but it devolved to the crown on that duke's attainder, in the beginning of the reign of king George I. and this houſe was, by his preſent majeſty, confirmed to the late queen Caroline, in caſe ſhe became queen-dowager of England : 8½ miles WSW. London.

RICHMOND, a town of England, in the county of York, on the Swale, which gives name to a tract of country, called Richmondſhire, which belongs to the duchy of Lancaſter. RIF, ſee Bahira.

RIFERBACH, a river of Germany, which runs into the Inn, 2 miles N. Kuffſtain.

RIGA, a ſea-port town of Ruſſia, on the Duna, in the Gulf of the Baltic, called the Gulf of Riga, the capital of a province, ſee of an archbiſhop, and formerly the capital of Livonia. Next to Peterſburgh, it is the moſt commercial town in the whole Ruſſian empire. The trade is chiefly carried on by foreign merchants, who are reſident in the town. The merchants of an Engliſh factory, eſtabliſhed there, enjoy the greateſt ſhare of the commerce. The principal exports are corn, hemp, flax, iron, timber, maſts, leather, tallow, &c. its principal imports are ſalt, cloth, ſilks, wine, grocery-wares, and ſalted herrings. The maſts grow moſtly on the diſtricts which border on the Dnieper, and are ſent up that river to a landing-place, and tranſported about 30 verſts to the Duna. They are then formed into floats, of from 50 to 200 pieces, and deſcend the ſtream to Riga. They are uſually from 70 to 80 feet in length. The hemp is brought from the Ukraine and Poland, and employs two years in its paſſage to Riga. The barks in which it is conveyed are from 250 to 300 tons' burthen, are covered with matting, ſloping like a pent-houſe roof, and have a falſe bottom. They aſcend the Dnieper and the Duna, but can only paſs the laſt mentioned river in the ſpring, or about three weeks after the ſnow begins to melt, on account of the numerous ſhoals; ſo that if they miſs that time, they are delayed till autumn. The inhabitants of Riga carry on alſo a conſiderable commerce in ſalt. They import it from Spain, and ſend it up the Duna, to ſupply the diſtricts bordering on that river, and by land to Courland, and the neighbouring provinces of Poland. Riga contains within the fortifications 9000 inhabitants, and in the ſuburbs 15,000, excluſive of a garriſon of 1000 ſoldiers. Riga was built in the year 1200, and ſoon after incloſed with a wall. It has ſuffered very much both by fires and ſieges: of the latter, the moſt remarkable are thoſe it ſuſtained from the Ruſſians in 1656; the Saxons and Poles in 1700; and a ſecond time from the Ruſſians in 1710, when it was obliged to ſubmit to Peter the Great: 300 miles NNE. Warſaw, and 160 NE. Konigſberg. Long. 41. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 56. 55. N.

RIMFORSA, a town of Sweden, in the province of Weſt Gothland: 17 miles S. Linkoping.

RIMINI, a ſea-port town of Italy, in the Romagna, once ſituated on the ſea-coaſt, but for ſome centuries the ſea has receded to a diſtance. The harbour, on the river Marechia, on which the city is built, is now ſo choked up with ſand, as ſcarcely to admit of ſmall barks. This city was anciently in a very flouriſhing condition, but, among other calamities, in the courſe of time, ſuffered extremely by an earthquake, in the year 1671. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Ravenna. In the ſquare before the council-houſe, is a beautiful fountain, a braſs ſtatue of St. Raul, and another of pope Paul V. and a large library, in a very elegant ſtructure, and preſented for the uſe of the public, by count Gambalonga. Among the antiquities, is a triumphal arch, erected to the emperor Auguſtus, the remains of an amphitheatre, the ſuggeſtum, from which Julius Cæſar is ſaid to have harangued his army after paſſing the Rubicon, and ſome ſtones with inſcriptions. Its ancient name was Ariminum: 57 miles SE. Bologna, and 133 N. Rome. Long. 30. 13. E. Ferro. Lat. 44 7. N.

RIMMERTZHEYDR, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 4 miles ENE. Neiſſe.

RINDOMS, a town of Spain, in the province of Catalonia: 11 miles NW. Tarragona.

RINDSAKER, a town of Norway: 60 miles NNE. Chriſtiania.

RINEKENBERG, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Carinthia: 6 miles E. Wolkenmarck.

RINGELSTORFF, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 4 miles ENE. Ziſterſdorff.

RINGENTHAL, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and circle of Erzgeburg: 1 mile N. Mitweyda.

RINGERIKE, a town of Norway: 24 miles NNE. Chriſtiania.

RINGKIOBING, a town of Denmark, ſituated on the coaſt of a large gulf of the North Sea, to which it gives name. The inhabitants almoſt entirely employ themſelves in trading to Holland and Norway. The voyage to the former, with a fair wind, may be performed in 30 hours. Several traders, who traffic with Viborg and other inland towns, have their warehouſes here. The bay affords plenty of good fiſh, particularly oyſters. It is of a good depth, and ſecure, except near the entrance, where there is ſome danger, on account of the ſand-banks thrown up by the ſea: 48 miles NW. Ripen: and 43 SW. Viborg. Long. 8. 18. E. Greenwich. Lat. 56. 7. N.

RINGLEBEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and principality of Eiſenach: 6 miles N. Erfurt, and 26 ENE. Eiſenach.

RINGSTED, a town of Denmark, in the iſland of Zealand. It was anciently a large city; but by ſeveral fires it has been greatly reduced, ſo that at preſent it is but a ſmall town. The great church was erected in 1475, and was famous for ſeveral popiſh reliques. In it lie buried ſeveral kings, queens, &c. as Waldemar I. Waldemar II. Erick the Saint, duke Knut the Saint, and other perſons of diſtinction. This town is ſtill famous for the court of judicature, to which an appeal lies from all the courts of Zealand, except Copenhagen and ſome other towns; whereas from this court there is no appeal but to the ſupreme court at Copenhagen: 29 miles SW. Copenhagen. Long. 11. 51. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 28. N.

RINGWOOD, a town of the United States of America, in Jerſey: 23 miles N. Morriſtown.

RINGWOOD, a town of England, in the county of Hants, near the Avon, with a weekly market on Wedneſday. Near this town the duke of Monmouth was taken, after his defeat at Sedgmoor, in the year 1685: 14 miles NNE. Pool, and 91 SW. London.

RINTELN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Shauenburg, ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the Weſer. The univerſity of Stadthagen was removed to this town, in the year 1621. The profeſſors of divinity here are Lutheran, but in the other faculties are alſo Calviniſt ones, and the two Calviniſt preachers here, in particular, are at the ſame time profeſſors of the Hebrew and Greek languages. To the Lutherans belong the town-church, but the Calviniſts and the garriſon make uſe of the univerſity-church for their ſervice. In the year 1665, Hedewig Sophia, landgravine of Heſſe, began to environ the town with ramparts, ditches, and bulwarks, which were finiſhed in 1668. The inhabitants apply themſelves for the moſt part to agriculture, the breeding of cattle, and brewing: 9 miles SSE. Minden. Long. 26. 22. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 14. N.

RINVEEL POINT, a cape of Ireland, on the weſt coaſt of the county of Galway. Long. 9. 58. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 36. N.

RINUM, a town of Perſia, in the province of Segeſtan: 20 leagues ENE. Zareng.

RIO DES APOSTOLOS, a river of North America, which runs into the northern part of the Gulf of California.

RIO BUENO, a river of the iſland of Jamaica, which runs into the ſea, on the north coaſt. Long. 77. 19. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 30. N.

RIO COBRE, a river of the iſland of Jamaica, which paſſes by Spaniſh Town, and runs into the ſea, 4 miles NW. from Kingſton.

RIO DEL CONCHES, or de Salinas, a river of North America, which joins the Brava, near its mouth.

RIO GRANDE, ſee Grand River.

RIO GRANDE, a river of the iſland of Jamaica, which runs into the ſea, on the north coaſt. Long. 76. 14. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 13. N.

RIO GRANDE, a town of South America, in Braſil, and juriſdiction of Fernambuco, formerly the ſeat of a juriſdiction.

RIO GRANDE, a river of South America, in Braſil. It has, however, no claim to the pompous title, though it has water enough near its mouth to bear ſhips of conſiderable bulk; but its entrance, if we may believe the Portugueſe, is difficult and dangerous, though wide and deep enough farther in. The mouth is ſituated Lat. 5. 45. N.

RIO DE LA HACHA, ſee Hacba.

RIO JANEIRO, a juriſdiction of South America, in Braſil, ſo called from the river Janeiro, which runs through the middle of it. The natives call this country and river by the name of Ganabara, and the French, who attempted to make a ſettlement here, continued the appellation; but the Portugueſe, on their becoming maſters of the country, called it Rio de Janeiro, which is the only name it is now known by. At the mouth of the river, on the eaſt ſide, is the fort of Santa Cruz; and on the weſt that of St. Jago, together with the capital. The rivers in this captainſhip are but few, and not remarkable for their largeneſs, except that from which it has its name; though this is rather a gulf or bay than a river, as the water in it is ſalt. Two large rivers, indeed, diſcharge themſelves into it, but their waters are not at all ſufficient for the capacious bay which is called Rio de Janeiro. The banks of the two rivers above mentioned have many villages of the natives. At the mouth of the Rio de Janeiro are ſeveral ſmall iſlands, which render the entrance both difficult and dangerous, and it is ſurrounded with hills of a moderate height.

RIO DE JANEIRO, a city of South America, capital of a juriſdiction, and the preſent capital of Braſil, ſituated on a river of the ſame name. Rio de Janeiro, or the River of Januarius, was probably ſo called from its having been diſcovered on the feaſt-day of that ſaint; and the town, which is the capital of the Portugueſe dominions in America, derives its name from the river, which, indeed, is rather an arm of the ſea, for it does not appear to receive any conſiderable ſtream of freſh water: it ſtands on a plain, cloſe to the ſhore, on the weſt ſide of the bay, at the foot of ſeveral high mountains, which riſe behind it. It is neither ill deſigned nor ill built; the houſes, in general, are of ſtone, and two ſtories high; every houſe having, after the manner of the Portugueſe, a little balcony before its windows, and a lattice of wood before the balcony. Its circuit captain Cook eſtimated at about three miles; for it appears to be equal in ſize to the largeſt county towns in England, Briſtol and Liverpool not excepted; the ſtreets are ſtraight, and of a convenient breadth, interſecting each other at right angles; the greater part, however, lie in a line with the citadel, called St. Sebaſtian, which ſtands on the top of a hill that commands the town. It is ſupplied with water from the neighbouring hills, by an aqueduct, which is raiſed upon two ſtories of arches, and is ſaid in ſome places to be at a great height from the ground, from which the water is conveyed by pipes into a fountain in the great ſquare that exactly fronts the viceroy's palace. The water at this fountain, however, is ſo bad, that capt. Cook's company, who had been two months at ſea, confined to that in caſks, which was almoſt always foul, could not drink it with pleaſure. Water of a better quality is laid into ſome other parts of the town. The churches are very fine, and there is more religious parade in this place than in any of the popiſh countries in Europe: there is a proceſſion of ſome pariſh every day, with various inſignia, all ſplendid and coſtly in the higheſt degree; they beg money, and ſay prayers in great form, at the corner of every ſtreet. The government here, as to its form, is mixed; it is, notwithſtanding very deſpotic in fact. It conſiſts of the viceroy, the governor of the town, and a council: without the conſent of this council, in which the viceroy has a caſting vote, no judicial act ſhould be performed; yet both the viceroy and governor frequently commit perſons to priſon at their own pleaſure, and ſometimes ſend them to Liſbon, without acquainting their friends or family with what is laid to their charge, or where they may be found. To reſtrain the people from travelling into the country, and getting into any diſtrict where gold or diamonds may be found, of both which there is much more than the government can otherwiſe ſecure, certain bounds are preſcribed them, at the diſcretion of the viceroy, ſometimes at a few, and ſometimes at many miles diſtance from the city. The inhabitants, which are very numerous, conſiſt of Portugueſe, Negroes, and Indians, the original natives of the country. The townſhip of Rio, which is but a ſmall part of the capitanea, or province, is ſaid to contain 37,000 white perſons, and 629,000 blacks, many of whom are free; making together 666,000. The military eſtabliſhment here conſiſts of 12 regiments of regular troops, 6 of which are Portugueſe, and 6 Creoles; and 12 other regiments of provincial militia. It is generally allowed, that the women both of the Spaniſh and Portugueſe ſettlements in South America, make leſs liberty of granting perſonal favours, than thoſe of any other civilized country in the world. Murders are frequently committed here; but the churches afford an aſylum to the criminal. The country round the town is beautiful in the higheſt degree; the wildeſt ſpots being varied with a greater luxuriance of flowers, both as to number and beauty, than the beſt gardens in England. Upon the trees and buſhes ſat an almoſt endleſs variety of birds, eſpecially ſmall ones, many of them covered with the moſt elegant plumage; among which was the humming-bird. Of inſects, too, there was a great variety, and ſome of them very beautiful; but they were much more nimble than thoſe of Europe, eſpecially the butterflies, moſt of which flew near the tops of the trees, and were, therefore, very difficult to be caught, except when the ſea breeze blew freſh, which kept them nearer to the ground. There is the appearance of but little cultivation; the greater part of the land is wholly uncultivated, and very little care and labour ſeem to have been beſtowed upon the reſt; there are, indeed, little patches or gardens, in which many kinds of European garden ſtuff are produced, particularly cabbages, peas, beans, kidney beans, turnips, and white radiſhes, but all much inferior to our own: water-melons and pine-apples are alſo produced in theſe ſpots, and they are the only fruits that we ſaw cultivated, though the country produces muſk melons, oranges, lemons, ſweet lemons, citrons, plantains, bananas, mangos, mamane-apples, acajou or caſhou apples and nuts, jamboira of two kinds, one of which bears a ſmall black fruit, cocoa-nuts, palm-nuts of two kinds, one long, the other round, and palm-berries. Of theſe fruits, the water-melons and the oranges are the beſt in their kind; the pine-apples are much inferior to thoſe in England, they are, indeed, more juicy and ſweet, but have no flavour. The melons are mealy, and inſipid; but the water-melons are excellent, they have a flavour, at leaſt a degree of acidity, which the Engliſh have not. There are alſo ſeveral ſpecies of the prickle-pear, and ſome European fruits, particularly the apple and peach, both which were very mealy and inſipid. In theſe gardens alſo grow yams and manioc, which in the Weſt Indies is called caſſada or caſſava. The ſoil, though it produces tobacco and ſugar, will not produce bread-corn; ſo that the people here have no wheat-flour but what is brought from Portugal, and ſold at the rate of a ſhilling a pound, though it is generally ſpoiled by being heated in its paſſage. As to manufactures, capt. Cook neither ſaw nor heard of any, except that of cotton hammocks, in which people are carried about here, as they are with us in ſedan chairs; and theſe are principally, if not wholly, fabricated by the Indians. The riches of the place conſiſt chiefly in the mines, which lie far up the country. Much gold is certainly brought from theſe mines, but at an expence of life that muſt ſtrike every man, to whom cuſtom has not made it familiar, with horror. No leſs than 40,000 negroes are annually imported, on the king's account, to dig the mines. Precious ſtones are alſo found here in ſuch plenty, that a certain quantity only is allowed to be collected in a year, to collect this quantity, a number of people are ſent into the country where they are found, and when it is got together, which ſometimes happens in a month, ſometimes in leſs, and ſometimes in more, they return: and after that, whoever is found in theſe precious diſtricts, on any pretence, before the next year, is immediately put to death. The jewels found here are diamonds, topazes of ſeveral kinds, and amethyſts. The harbour of Rio de Janeiro is ſituated weſt-by-north 18 leagues from Cape Frio, and may be known by a remarkable hill in the form of a ſugar loaf, at the weſt point of the bay: but as all the coaſt is very high, and riſes in many peaks, the entrance of this harbour may be more certainly diſtinguiſhed by the iſlands that lie before; one of which, called Rodonda, is high and round, like a hay-ſtack, and lies at the diſtance of two leagues and a half from the entrance of the bay, in the direction of ſouth by weſt; but the firſt iſlands which are met with, coming from the eaſt or Cape Frio, are two that have rocky appearances, lying near to each other, and at the diſtance of about four miles from the ſhore; there are alſo at the diſtance of three leagues to the weſtward of theſe, two other iſlands, which lie near to each other, a little without the bay, on the eaſt ſide, and very near the ſhore. This harbour is certainly a good one; the entrance, indeed is not wide, but the ſea-breeze, which blows every day from 10 or 12 o'clock till ſunſet, makes it eaſy for any ſhip to go in before the wind; and it grows wider as the town is approached, ſo that abreaſt of it there is room for the largeſt fleet, in five or ſix fathom water, with an oozy bottom. At the narrow part, the entrance is defended by two forts. The river, and, indeed, the whole coaſt, abounds with a great variety of fiſh. Though the climate is hot, the ſituation of this place is certainly wholeſome. Upon the whole, ſays captain Cook, Rio de Janeiro, is a very good place for ſhips to put in at, that want refreſhment: the harbour is ſafe and commodious; and proviſions, except wheaten bread and flour, may be eaſily procured: as a ſuccedaneum for bread, there are yams and caſſada, in plenty; beef, both freſh and jerked, may be bought at about two pence farthing a pound; though it is very lean. Mutton is ſcarcely to be procured, and hogs and poultry are dear; of garden-ſtuff and fruit there is abundance, of which, however, none can be preſerved at ſea but the pumpkin. Rum, ſugar, and moloſſes, all excellent in their kind, may be had at a reaſonable price; tobacco alſo is cheap, but it is not good. Here is a yard for building ſhipping, and a ſmall hulk to heave down by; for as the tide never riſes above ſix or ſeven feet, there is no other way of coming at a ſhip's bottom. Long. 42. 46. W. Greenwich. Lat. 22. 50. S.

RIOBAMBA, a juriſdiction of South America, in the audience of Quito. The productions and manufactures of this province excel all the reſt of the provinces of Peru. Several parts of it alſo are full of mines of gold and ſilver, ſome of them remarkably rich; the ore of it being found by eſſay to contain 80 marks of ſilver per cheſt; a very aſtoniſhing circumſtance, the uſual produce in thoſe called rich mines being only 8 or 10 marks per cheſt, each cheſt containing 50 quintals of ore. This is rarely the caſe with the mines of Potoſi and Lipes, though, after the expence of carrying the ore to other places, in order to its being refined, and other incidental charges, the profits are conſiderably large. Indeed, the whole country is full of mines, ſo that the inhabitants might extract large quantities of gold and ſilver from them. But they ſeem to be intimidated by an apprehenſion of the difficulties that muſt attend an attempt to open theſe mines. Riobamba is th capital: 30 leagues S. Quito.

It appears to have been built about the time when Chriſtianity was introduced into this kingdom, and next to Wiborg, is reckoned the moſt ancient town in North Jutland. Ripen was formerly one of the moſt celebrated and flouriſhing cities in the north: for it had four pariſh churches and five chapels, beſides the cathedral, four convents, with their churches, a ſtrong caſtle, and between 600 and 700 free burghers. A conſiderable number of ſhips traded to Norway, France, England, Holland, &c. from this port; and the city had the privilege of coining money. But an end was put to all this grandeur and opulence, partly by ſeveral conflagrations (particularly dreadful fire in 1580) and partly by inundations, and the ravages of war. The merchants' old exchange is now converted into a town-houſe. Here is ſtill ſome little trade carried on in grain, horned cattle, horſes, &c. but the ſhallowneſs of the river will admit of none but ſmall veſſels to come up to the city, and theſe only at high water: 77 miles S. ROCHELLE (La), a ſea-port town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Lower Charente, with a good harbour. Before the revolution, it was the ſee of a biſhop, and capital of Aunis. Its commerce in general, and eſpecially to the French colonies in Africa and America, is very conſiderable, the harbour being ſafe, though the entrance to it is narrow and none of the deepeſt. In the 16th century, the inhabitants joined in the reformation, fortified the town, and held out a ſiege. In the year 1622, Louis XIII. in order to compel them to a ſurrender, ordered Fort Louis to be erected, at the entrance of their harbour, and in the year 1628, to prevent their receiving any ſuccours by ſea, a mole was raiſed, which ſurrounded the haven. Famine at length obliged them, the ſame year, to capitulate ; in conſequence of which their privileges were taken from them, and the fortifications demoliſhed ; but in the reign of Louis XIV. theſe were again repaired by M. Vauban. The air here is no better than at Rochefort, and from the ſame cauſe. The number of inhabitants is about 15,000 : 8½ poſts NNW. Saintes, and 52½ WSW. Paris. Long. 16. 32. E. ROCHESTER, a city of England, in the county of Kent, ſituated on the Medway, over which is a bridge of Stone. The Romans had a ſtation here, and it is probable a fortreſs, on which a caſtle was afterwards built, either by the Saxons, or William the Conqueror. The preſent building is generally imputed to William II. Rocheſter was erected into a biſhopric in the beginning of the 7th century, and a church was built by king Ethelbert, for Juſtus, the firſt biſhop. Rocheſter was very early encompaſſed by a wall, which is yet entire in ſome places, none of the gates are ſtanding. In the year 1165, it was incorporated by Henry II. but the laſt charter was granted by Charles I. which inveſts the magiſtracy in a mayor and aldermen. ROESCHILD, or Roſchild, a town of Denmark, in the iſland of Zealand, ſituated near the bay of Iſe-fiord, erected into a biſhopric in the year 1012. It was firſt ſurrounded with a rampart and ditch, in the year of Chriſt 1150; and in 1268, or 1278, it obtained the privileges of a city. As the biſhops of this ſee were in poſſeſſion of Roeſchild, it increaſed to ſuch an extent as to contain 27 large churches and convents within its walls. Some of the churches of the neighbouring villages were formerly included within its circuit, and the ſtreets extended quite to the ſea-ſhore. The kings of Denmark were formerly elected and crowned in this city, and alſo made it the place of their reſidence. The great decay into which this city afterwards fell, was partly owing to frequent fires, partly to the intolerable tyranny of the biſhops who reſided here, and partly to the flouriſhing ſtate of Copenhagen. Laſtly, the reformation muſt have been, in a great meaſure, the cauſe of it; for, in conſequence of the change in religion, the monks and clergy, who ſpent their large revenues in this place, were obliged to quit the country. Roeſchild conſiſts at preſent, only of an inconſiderable number of houſes, which, for the moſt part, are meanly built; and the inhabitants ſupport themſelves chiefly by agriculture, and the planting of tobacco. ROMANIA, a province of European Turkey, occupying what was anciently called Thrace, and owes its preſent name to Conſtantinople, which was called New Rome. By the Turks it is called Rumelia or Rumili, and Icella. It is bounded on the north by Bulgaria, on the eaſt by the Black Sea, on the ſouth by the Sea of Marmora and the Archipelago, and on the weſt by Macedonia. The country is for the moſt part level, though interſperſed with ſome large and remarkable mountains, the moſt conſiderable of which is Mount Hæmus, dividing the country to the north from Bulgaria. The next in ſize is Rhodopè, celebrated by the ancient poets for the cataſtrophe of Orpheus. Mount Pangæus ſeparates this country from Macedonia. Hæmus and Rhodopè are two long ridges of mountains, extending from the frontiers of Macedonia to the Black Sea. The territories among the mountains are cold and barren; but thoſe near the ſea pleaſant and fertile, producing all kinds of grain, with other neceſſaries, particularly rice, which grows here in great plenty, and is remarkably good. This country was anciently divided into ſeveral independent kingdoms. The Thracian Cherſoneſus was alſo governed by its own kings. The preſent inhabitants are Greeks, deſcendants of the Thracians, with a mixture of Turks. The flouriſhing ſtate of the ſciences and beaux arts among the Greeks was chiefly owing to the Thracians; but at preſent there is ſcarce a perſon of any eminence in literature in all Romania. The country is governed by three ſangiacs; and, conſequently, is divided into as many ſangiacates. Conſtantinople is the capital.

ROME, a city of Italy, and at one time capital of the world; founded by Romulus, in the year 748 before Chriſt; ſituated on ſeven hills, on the ſide of the Tiber. The names of the hills were Palatinus, Capitolinus, Aventinus, Janiculus, Cœlius, Eſquilinus, and Quirinalis. At this time it is the reſidence of the pope, and the capital of his dominions, ſituated in the province called Campagna. It contains 81 pariſhes, 200,000 inhabitants, including ſtrangers, 2827 prieſts, 3847 monks, 1910 nuns, 1665 ſtudents, and 1470 paupers. The ſtreets are large and handſome, but not kept in good repair. It is divided into 14 quarters or wards, called riones, in which are found a great number of beautiful ſquares, ſuperb palaces, and magnificent churches; the gates are for the moſt part triumphal arches. It is ten miles in circumference, but this extent comprehends gardens and uninhabited places, and defended by the caſtle of St. Angelo. 1. In the Rione di Monte is the celebrated church of St. Giovanni in Laterano, dedicated to St. John, in the 7th century, and raiſed on the ruins of a palace built by Conſtantine, in the year 324. Near this church is the baptiſtery of Conſtantine, celebrated for its ornaments, its antiquity, painting, columns, and ſtatutes. Before the church is an obeliſk, conſtructed at Thebes, in Upper Egypt, and brought down the Nile to Alexandria, from whence, by the order of Conſtantius, it was conveyed to Rome; it is of red granite, and loaded with hieroglyphics; the height is 204 palms, and the weight upwards of 1,300,000 pounds. In this ward alſo are found the Scala Santa, a ſquare ſanctuary, where are 28 marble ſteps which they ſay were brought from the palace of Pilate, at Jeruſalem; the palace of the Lateran, one of the moſt ſuperb buildings in Rome, is at preſent appropriated to the employment of 250 poor girls in different kinds of work; the church of St. Stephen, called the Round, from its form, which was an ancient temple of Faunus, ſupported by 60 pillars of granite, or marble of Paros; the church of the Holy Croſs of Jeruſalem, buit by Conſtantine, celebrated for its relics, its magnificent columns of granite, and beautiful paintings; the ruins of a temple, dedicated to Venus and Cupid; the monaſtery of St. Euſebius; built on the ruins of the baths and palace of Gordianus; the church of St. Laurence; the church of St. Mary Major, built in the year 352, in which are found the magnificent chapels of Sixtus V. and the Borgheſe family, numerous mauſolea, marble columns, ſtatues, and relics; Trajan's Pillar, one of the moſt beautiful monuments of ancient Rome, and perhaps in the world, its height is 217 palms, including the pedeſtal, the lower diameter is 16 palms, and the upper 14¼, adorned with bas-reliefs, in which are 2500 human figures; the remains of the baths of Titus, of temples dedicated to Concord, to Peace, to Jupiter Tonans, to Jupiter Stator, with many other churches, palaces, and monuments of antiquity. 2. In the Rione di Trevi, is found the church of the Twelve Apoſtles, firſt built in the reign of Conſtantine, and rebuilt by Clement XI. celebrated for its pictures and architecture; this ward likewiſe contains a church, dedicated to our Lady of Loretto, adorned with Corinthian pillars, and the moſt beautiful ſtatues: the church of St. Mary in Trivio, built or repaired by Beliſarius; the churches of St. Vincent, of Anaſtaſius, St. Silveſter, St. Suſanna, and many ſuperb palaces. 3. The Rione de Colonna contains the churches of St. Andre, St. Silveſter in Capite, St. Mary in Aquiro, St. Mary Magdalen, St. Laurence in Lucina, &c.; the Piazza di Colonna is large, of which the buildings are handſome, in this ſquare is a fountain, and a marble column of Antoninus, conſtructed in the time of Commodus, and all of marble; the diameter of the pillar is 21 palms, and the height 177, on the ſummit is the ſtatue of St. Paul, 19 palms in height: the bas-relief repreſents the wars of Marcus Aurelius; in this ward is the great hall of juſtice; the houſe of the miſſionaries, whither all eccleſiaſtics of Rome retire for ten days before they receive holy orders; with ſeveral palaces and monuments of antiquity. 4. The Rione di Campo di Marzo contains the ancient Campus Martius; in this are found ſeveral beautiful churches and magnificent palaces; among other buildings is the Clementine College, founded for the natives of Illyricum, by pope Clement VIII. and now appropriated to the Dalmatians; the obeliſks of Auguſtus and Seſoſtris, which after being long neglected, were erected by pope Benedict XIV. 5. The Rione de Ponte takes its name from the bridge of St. Angelo; in it are found a college for 100 ſtudents, Hungarians and Germans; the church of St. Apollinarius, conſtructed on the ruins of a temple dedicated to Apollo; the chuch of St. Simon and Jude; of our Lady of Peace, built to fulfil a vow of Sixtus IV. for the peace of Italy, and repaired by Alexander II. with ſome others, and ſeveral palaces. 6. The Rione di Parione occupies a part of the Flaminian Circus; it contains the beautiful church of St. Nicolas; near which is the Piazza di Navonne, in the centre of which is a fountain, executed by Bernini, repreſenting the Danube, the Ganges, the Nile, and the Plata, ſitting on a rock, which ſupports an obeliſk, and pours out the waters by large ſtreams; it incloſes a cavern, from which a lion and a horſe ſeem advancing to drink: the deſign is bold, and the ſculpture excellent: the obeliſk is of red granite, 73 palms in height, and full of Egyptian characters; the church of St. Agnes is an elegant building, in which is a magnificent mauſoleum of Innocent X. the church of St. James, of Spain; the ſtatue of Paſquin, now mutilated, ſo celebrated for bon mots and ſatyrical placards affixed to it, from hence called Paſquinades; the beautiful church of St. Mary in Vallicella, in the neighbourhood of which the fathers of the oratory reſide; with ſeveral other churches and palaces. 7. The Rione della Regola, near the Tiber, contains the Farneſe Palace, in which is ſeen the celebrated coloſſal ſtatue of Hercules, and many others; this palace was built by Michael Angelo, with the ſtone taken from Veſpaſian's amphitheatre; the gallery was painted by Hannibal Caracci; the Monte della Pieta, eſtabliſhed in the year 1539, for the purpoſe of lending money on pledges without intereſt; the church of St. Paul a la Regola, St. Mary in Monticelli, &c. 8. The Rione di St. Euſtachio contains the beautiful church of St. Charles aux Catinari, in which, among many others, is a beautiful picture repreſenting the death of St. Anne; the church of St. Andre de la Valle, which contains ſome excellent paintings; the college de Sapienza, is, perhaps, the moſt celebrated in the univerſe; this magnificent building was begun under Leo X. from the deſign of Michael Angelo; the architecture is of a noble ſimplicity; the church is remarkable for a triangular form, the decoration grand, with a perfect harmony between the plan, elevation, and cupola; the palace of Juſtiniani, adorned with a great number of bas reliefs, and antique ſtatues; many of them found on the ſpot on which were the baths of Nero, and the palace is now erected; the Theatre d'Argentina, and many other palaces, antiquities, and churches. 9. The Riona della Pigna contains the Piazza della Rotondo, in which is a beautiful fountain of white marble, ornamented with an obeliſk and dolphins, which ſpout out the water. This ward is named from the celebrated ſtructure called, by the ancients, Pantheon, now a church dedicated to all the ſaints by Gregory IV. and named Rotondo; it is 200 palms in height, and 218 in diameter, behind it are the remains of the baths of Agrippa; the Roman College is a vaſt and ſuperb edifice, built in the time of Gregory XIV. for the ſtudy of the languages and ſciences; here is kept the muſeum of Father Kircher, and the library is well furniſhed; the church of St. Maria della Sopra Minerva, ſo called from a temple of Minerva which anciently ſtood there; in the church of Ignatius are ſome beautiful paintings, and the tomb of Gregory XIV; the church dedicated to Jeſus is a ſuperb building, and the inſide majeſtic; the paintings are admirable; the mauſoleum of cardinal Bellarmine near the grand altar is adorned with the ſtatues of Wiſdom and Religion; among the chapels, the moſt beautiful are thoſe of St. Francis Xavier and St. Ignatius, the laſt eſpecially is aſtoniſhingly magnificent; the church of St. Stephen du Cacco, built on the ruins of a temple of Serapis. 10. The Rione di Campitelli, or Du Capitole; this ward contains the Capitolinus Mountain, the Palatinus, and part of Mount Cœlius; the church of St. Mary in Campitelli, rebuilt in the year 1656, by the people of Rome: the ancient capitol is deſtroyed, and the Campidoglio is erected on the place where it ſtood, the aſcent to which is by a flight of ſteps: the architect was Michael Angelo. Here are found many beautiful ſtatues and pictures, by the moſt celebrated maſters; the Tarpeian rock is now called Monte Caprino; the remains of the temple of Jupiter Tonans; and the church of St. Peter in Carcere; part of a priſon conſtructed by Ancus Martius; the ruins of a temple of Concord; the church of our Lady of Conſolation; the church of St. Sebaſtian, built in the ancient Hippodrome. In this ward is found likewiſe the Colliſeum, a ſuperb building, conſtructed at the command of Veſpaſian, by the Jews brought from Jeruſalem, and deſtined for the combats of gladiators and public ſpectacles; it was 2338 palms in circumference; the outſide was compoſed of four orders of architecture, and all round was a double portico, ornamented with ſtatues, part of which yet remain; the inſide is pulled down, and in the centre is a church, with thirteen oratories round the arena; near it is the arch of Conſtantine, erected by the ſenate and people of Rome; St. Mary de la Navicella, an ancient church, rebuilt after the deſigns of Raphael, &c. 11. The Rione di St. Angelo; the church of St. Angelo, which gives name to the ward, was built in the eighth century; near it is the theatre of Marcellus, built by Auguſtus, and capable of holding 30,000 ſpectators; the palace of Savelli, and the palace of Mattei, celebrated for the pictures and ſtatues which they contain; and many others. 12. The Rione di Ripa, on the ſide of the river; this ward includes the Aventine Mountain, and the iſland of St. Bartholomew, inhabited at the time of the expulſion of the Tarquins, and then called Tiberina and Lycania; the church of St. Bartholomew was founded on the ruins of an ancient temple of Eſculapius. This iſland is joined to the reſt of the city by two bridges, one of which was anciently called Ceſtius, the other Fabricius; the church of St. Nicholas in Carcere, built near the common priſon; St. George in Valebro; the arches of Septimus Severus, and Janus; St. Mary in Coſmedin, built by the earlieſt Chriſtians, on the ruins of a temple of Modeſty; St. Paul, without the walls, is a patriarchal church, and, next to St. Peter, one of the largeſt in Rome, built by Conſtantine; the immenſe ruins of the baths of Caracalla, in which it is ſaid 3000 perſons might bathe at one time; the grand circus; the tomb of Ceſtius; the catacombs or vaults dug in the ſtone or ſolid earth, and uſed for depoſiting of the dead in this ward. 13. The Rione di Tranſtevere is on the other ſide of the Tiber, and includes the Mountain Janiculus; in the church of St. Peter in Montorio is the celebrated picture of the transfiguration, by Raphael, by ſome thought to be the moſt perfect painting that exiſts; the hoſpital of St. Michael, which ſerves as a houſe of induſtry, a priſon, and a houſe of correction; in this part were Cæſar's Gardens; the baths o Severus; the Naumachium of Auguſtus; the temple of Fortune; and here now are ſeveral ſeats or villas, as the Villa Corſini, the Villa Panfili, one of the largeſt and moſt magnificent in Rome, and the whole being ſix miles in circumference; the Farneſine is a pleaſure-houſe of the king Naples, the palace is beautiful, and the gardens along the river extenſive the church of St. Mary in Tranſtevere was founded in the year 224; ther are ſeveral others. The Rione di Borgo, or Rione du Vatican; this, too is beyond the Tiber, and is joined to the reſt of the city by means of th bridge of St. Angelo, anciently Pons Ælius; in it is the caſtle of St Angelo, anciently Moles Adriani, from its founder; it is of a circular form, and exceedingly ſtrong: here the papal crown is kept, and priſoners of ſtate are confined; it communicates with the Vatican by a long covered gallery; the Vatican is a vaſt irregular palace, built at ſeveral times, and is ſaid to contain upwards of 4400 apartments, many of them painted by the moſt eminent maſters; the library is compoſed of the ancient collections of the popes, and ſeveral princes, and contains, it is ſaid, upwards of 40,000 manuſcripts. The church of St. Peter is the chef-d'œuvre of Italy, the largeſt and moſt beautiful church in the world. It was projected by Nicholas V.: Julius II. laid the firſt ſtone, in the year 1506; but the whole building was not finiſhed till the next century; it is ſaid to cover twenty acres, and to have coſt upwards of one million ſterling. The original artiſt was Bramante, but the greater part was from the plan of Michael Angelo, who raiſed the cupola; Maderni finiſhed it, in the year 1621. Long. 30. 9. E. Ferro. Lat. 41. 54. N.

ROSETTA, a town of Egypt, ſituated on an iſland, formed by the weſt branch of the Nile, anciently called the Bolbitine Branch. It was founded in the 8th century; the increaſing ſand-banks of the Nile no longer permitting veſſels to ſail as far as Faoua, this new city was built at, though now two leagues diſtant from, the mouth of the river. Abulfeda informs us, it was an inconſiderable place in the thirteenth century, nor had it greatly increaſed 200 years afterwards; but when the Ottomans added Egypt to their conqueſts, they neglected to repair the canals; and that of Faoua ceaſing to be navigable, Roſetta became the ſtore-houſe of the merchandiſe of Alexandria and Cairo. Trade ſoon made it flouriſh, and it is now one of the pleaſanteſt towns in Egypt. It ſpreads along the weſtern bank of the Nile, and is nearly a league in length, and ¼ as wide. No remakable ſquare is ſeen here; no ſtreet perfectly ſtraight; but the houſes built with terraces, ſtanding aſunder, and kept in good repair, have a pleaſing air of neatneſs and elegance. The only remarkable public edifices are the moſques. North of the city are gardens, where citron, orange, date, and ſycamore trees are promiſcuouſly planted; the mingling of the trees, and the arbours they form, impenetrable to the ſun's rays, together with the flowers ſcattered among them, render theſe groves moſt enchanting. The principal wealth of Roſetta flows from commerce. The tranſportation of foreign merchandize to Cairo, and of the productions of Egyp to the port of Alexandria, gives employment to a great number of mariners. The rice ſown round Roſetta is known by the name ſultani, and as it is appropriated to the uſe and conſumption of Conſtantinople, there are very rigorous laws which prohibit its exportation: 90 miles NNW. Cairo. Long. 48. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 31. 22. N.

ROSSSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north-eaſt by the county of Sutherland, on the eaſt by the Friths of Dornoch and Murray, on the ſouth by Inverneſsſhire, and on the weſt and north-weſt by the North Sea. The form is nearly triangular, but much indented on its coaſts, and is computed at above 60 miles each ſide. On the north-weſt part of the county it is deſolate and dreary, nothing is here ſeen, as far as the eye can reach, but vaſt piles of rocky mountains, with ſummits broken, ſerrated, and aſpiring into every form; ſome of which are always covered with ſnow. But, amid theſe, the moſt ſtriking object is an entire mountain of whitiſh marble, ſo extenſive, ſmooth, and gloſſy and even, as to appear like an enormous ſheet of ice. On the eaſt ſide it is fruitful in corn, fruit, and herbs, abounds in paſtures, and woods of fir, of great extent. It feeds great numbers of black cattle, horſes, goats, and deer, has abundance of land and ſea-fowl, and is well ſupplied with fiſh from the rivers and coaſts: ſeveral extenſive lochs and bays are found on the coaſts, which abound with herrings. ROSTOCK, a ſea-port town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Mecklenburg, in a lake which communicates with the Baltic. It contains three churches, and an univerſity, which was jointly founded by the dukes and the town, in 1419, and privileged by pope Martin V. whoſe bull was afterwards confirmed by the emperor, Ferdinand I. In 1437, the town falling under the ban both of the emperor and pope, the profeſſors removed to Griefswalde, from which place they returned again in the year 1443. In 1487, a miſunderſtanding having ariſen between the dukes and the town, the univerſity was removed to Lubeck, but reſtored again in 1492. This place has ſuffered thrice by the peſtilence, and at the beginning of the reformation, was almoſt entirely forſaken by its profeſſors and ſtudents, till, in 1530, Arnold Buren vigorouſly ſet about the reſtoration of it, and in 1560, the emperor, Ferdinand, endowed it with a new charter. Purſuant to a convention, made in 1563, between the dukes and the town, the former nominate and pay 15 profeſſors, and the town 9. The ſenate of the academy conſiſts of nine ducal profeſſors, and the nine appointed by the magiſtracy. In the ſame convention it was agreed that the dukes ſhould annually contribute the ſum of 3000 florins, and the town 500, towards the ſalaries of the profeſſors. The magiſtracy conſiſts of three burgher-maſters, one ſyndic, 12 aldermen, one ſecretary, and a prothonotary. It is endowed with the right of coining copper, ſilver, and gold, and in conſequence thereof has a mint. Both the civil and criminal juriſdiction are veſted in the magiſtracy, though with right of appeal to the two ſupreme courts of juſtice, except in thoſe caſes where no appeal is allowed. The town enjoys other conſiderable privileges, yet is hereditarily ſubject to the dukes, to whom, as an acknowledgment of its ſubjection, it annually pays the ſum of 55 rixdollars, as an urbor, or original tribute, as likewiſe the ſum of 600 florins, in conſideration of the grant of an exciſe. Roſtock carries on a large trade. About the year 1030, it was erected into a town, and in 1160, enlarged and fortified out of the remains of the town of Kiſzin, which once ſtood in its neighbourhood. In the year 1218, Lubeck rights were conferred on it, and in the ſame century alſo it was admitted into the Anſeatic confederacy: 25 miles NE. Weiſmar. Long. 29. 53. E. Ferro. Lat. 54. N.

ROTHENBURG, an imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and capital of a territory of the ſame name, near the Tauber, ſituated on a mountain. It receives the water for its neceſſary uſes out of the river Tauber, by means of a machine, by which it is forced up the mountain, and from thence aſcends in a direct line to what is called the Kligenthurn, from which it falls down again, producing three fountains in the town. Rothenburg is environed with ditches and walls, the latter of which are fortified with towers. The inhabitants are Lutherans. In the town are five churches; but ſervice is generally performed in two only. Rothenburg is a very ancient place; formerly it boaſted ſome counts of that name, one line of whom ſtyled itſelf from the ancient citadel here; but the real family of the counts of Rothenburg became extinct about the year 1110, in the perſon of count Henry, who ceded the town of Rothenburg to the empire. The emperors, Conrad IV. and Louis, mortgaged it to the houſe of Hohenlohe; but the laſt time of it being mortgaged it redeemed itſelf, and, in 1335, obtained from the emperor, Louis, an aſſurance that it ſhould not be mortgaged any more, which aſſurance alſo the emperors Charles IV. and Wenzel, likewiſe confirmed. This port is much more frequented by Britiſh traders than Amſterda for after they have weighed anchor, one tide brings them out to ſea. Among the principal buildings are the town-houſe, the bank, the Eaſt and Weſt India houſes, the arſenal, and ſome of the churches, particularly that dedicated to St. Laurent. There is here a college of admiralty, which holds the chief rank in the United States. On the eaſt ſide of the city they have a large baſon and dock, for the purpoſe of building and launching veſſels employed in the ſervice of the admiralty, and the Eaſt India company. The magiſtracy is compoſed of a council of 24, out of which are elected 4 burgo-maſters, a grand bailly, and 7 echevins. Beſides the magiſtracy of the city, they have three other tribunals, firſt, the college of the grand bailly, or dyckgrave of Schieland, and council, which is compoſed partly of nobility, and partly of the cities of Rotterdam, Goude, and Schiedam; they hold their aſſemblies at Rotterdam, in a houſe which they call Landhuys, and their buſineſs is to inſpect the dikes, ſuperintend the roads and canals, and take care of every thing that concerns the environs of the city. The ſecond tribunal is that of the judges of Schieland, whoſe juriſdiction extends over what does not belong particularly to the magiſtrates of cities. The third is the college of the lords of the admiralty for the Menſe, who have a houſe ſet apart for that buſineſs. RUGEN, an iſland in the Baltic, ſeparated from the coaſt of Hither Pomerania by a ſtrait, not above a mile wide, about ſixty miles in circumference, without reckoning the indentation of the coaſt. It is ſaid to derive its name from the Rugi, who at firſt inhabited thoſe Pomeranian coaſts beyond the Oder, but afterwards removed on this ſide of that river, making the country, called after their name, their chief place of reſidence. In the 13th century, the princes of Rugen alſo conquered a tract of land on the continent, but on the deceaſe of the laſt prince of Rugen, namely, duke Wartiſlav XI. who died in 1478, Rugen became united with Pomerania. In 1168, Waldemar I. king of Denmark, ſubdued Rugen, demoliſhed the temple there, and ſuppreſſed the pagan worſhip, compelling the inhabitants to embrace Chriſtianity. Thus the princes of Rugen became vaſſals to the crown of Denmark. At the treaty of Weſtphalia, Rugen was added to the crown of Sweden, as a particular principality. At the peace of Roeſchild, in 1658, and likewiſe at that of Copenhagen, in 1660, Denmark ceded to Sweden all the juriſdiction, civil and eccleſiaſtical, which till that time it had exerciſed over certain lands in the principality of Rugen. The ſea not only environs this iſland, but penetrates every where ſo far into it, as to form ſeveral other iſlands and peninſulas. The ſoil here is very fruitful, eſpecially in all kinds of grain, inſomuch, that every year ſome thouſands of laſts are ſhipped off for Stralſund. It breeds likewiſe abundance of cattle, yields a prodigious plenty of fiſh, but is ſupplied with the fuel it wants from Pomerania, though ſome places afford turf. The nobility here are very numerous, and enjoy conſiderable privileges. The preſident of the provincial tribunal is the prefect or governor, who both by virtue of an ancient cuſtom, and a particular privilege granted by Frederick I. king of Sweden, in 1720 muſt be a native, and nobleman, and to his aſſiſtance are aſſigned a ſecretary and purveyor. RUSSIA. This vaſt empire extends from the 41ſt to the 205th degrees of longitude eaſt from Ferro, and from the 43d to the 78th degrees of north latitude. On the north it is bounded by the Frozen Sea, on the eaſt by the North Pacific Ocean, on the ſouth by the Pacific Ocean, Chineſe and other parts of Tartary, the dominions of Perſia, the Caſpian Sea, Aſiatic and European Turkey, and on the weſt by Poland, Lithuania, Baltic, Finland, and Lapland. It is divided into forty-two governments, the names of which are, Peterſburg, Archangel, Olonetz, Viborg, Revel, Riga, Pſkov, Tver, Novgorod, Vologda, Jaroſlavl, Koſtrom, Viatka, Perm, Tobolſk, Moſcow, Smolenſk, Polotſk, Mogilev, Tchernigov, Novgorod Sieverſkoi, Charkov, Kurſk, Orel, Kaluga, Tula, Riazan, Vladimir, Niznei Novgorod, Kazan, Simbirſk, Penza, Tambov, Voronez, Saratov, Upha, Kolivan, Irkutſk, Kiev, Ekaterinoſlav, Caucaſus, and the country of the Coſacs. As this empire conſiſts of ſo great a number of provinces, many of which are very extenſive, the ſoil and temperature of the air muſt vary conſiderably in different parts of it; and, conſequently, one province may ſupply what is wanting in another. In thoſe parts which lie beyond the 60th degree of latitude, there are but few places where corn will grow to maturity; and in the northern part of the empire no garden fruits are produced, except in the country about Archangel, where horned cattle are alſo bred, and a great many buſhes and ſhrubs grow ſpontaneouſly, which yield ſeveral ſorts of berries. There is alſo plenty of wild beaſts and fowls, and ſeveral ſorts of fiſh in the neighbourhood of that city. In thoſe provinces which lie in the middle of the empire, the air is mild and temperate, and the ſoil produces all kinds of trees and garden fruits, corn, honey, &c. They are alſo well ſtocked with horned cattle, the woods abound in game, and the rivers are navigable, and full of the beſt ſorts of fiſh. In the ſouthern provinces the climate is hot: and though many barren waſtes are to be met with in ſome parts of them, yet in other places they are covered with verdure and flowers. Tobacco, wine, and ſilk, might be produced in them, and they are well watered with rivers, which afford plenty of fiſh, nor are they deſtitute of game, in proportion to the extent and number of the woods. Medicinal and ſaline ſprings are not uncommon in Ruſſia. Fine ſilver, which alſo yields ſome gold, is dug out of the mines in this country, and likewiſe exceedingly fine copper, iron, and many other minerals; as the famous marien-glaſs, called by ſome Maſcovy-glaſs, or iſing-glaſs, &c. with ſeveral precious ſtones. In the middle and northern parts of the empire, the cold is very ſevere, and the days extremely ſhort in winter; but the ſummers are warm and delightful; and even in the ſhorteſt nights the twilight is very luminous. At the winter ſolſtice, when the day is at the ſhorteſt, the ſun riſes and ſets on the horizon of ſome of the principal cities in the Ruſſian empire according to the following table:

|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| At Aſtrachan, | ſun riſes | — | 7 | 48 | ſun ſets | 4 | 12 |
| Kiev, | — | — | 8 | 7 | — | 3 | 53 |
| Moſcow, | — | — | 8 | 37 | — | 3 | 23 |
| Riga, | — | — | 8 | 47 | — | 3 | 13 |
| Tobolſk, | — | — | 8 | 56 | — | 3 | 4 |
| Peterſburg, | — | — | 9 | 15 | — | 2 | 45 |
| Archangel, | — | — | 10 | 24 | — | 1 | 36 |

At the ſummer ſolſtice, when the day is at its greateſt length, this order is reverſed. A perſon may travel cheap, and with great expedition in Ruſſia, both in ſummer and winter, eſpecially in the ſledges during the latter ſeaſon. The draught-horſes are extremely ſwift, and the roads very good, particularly in the winter time, between the principal cities of this country. It is nothing extraordinary to go with poſt-horſes from Peterſburg to Moſcow, which is about 440 miles, in 72 hours; and a commodious ſledge, drawn by a pair of poſt horſes, for this diſtance, may be hired for 14 or 15 rubels. Not one-third of the Ruſſian empire is ſufficiently peopled, or properly cultivated. The number of inhabitants who pay the poll-tax and furniſh recruits, is computed at near 13,000,000, and of the whole to near 27,000,000. Before the time of Peter I. the Ruſſians were, and in ſome reſpects not undeſervedly, looked upon as mere ſavages. But that wiſe and great prince by incredible application, and a proper temperature of ſeverity and mildneſs, brought about ſuch a happy change in their manners, as in a great meaſure ſets them on a level with the other civilized nations of Europe. The inſatiable eagerneſs of the common people after ſpirituous and other ſtrong liquors, eſpecially in the carnival time, is by Dr. Buſching imputed in a great meaſure to the rigorous faſts they obſerve, and the ſlender diet they live upon throughout the year. Their food chiefly conſiſts of turnips, cabbage, peas, large cucumbers, onions, and coarſe ill-taſted fiſh. Their drink is quas, which is a kind of ſmall beer; and even among the gentry brandy always makes a part of every repaſt. Among the lower ſort, it is generally the men who give themſelves up to theſe exceſſes; though, indeed, it is no uncommon ſight at Peterſburg to ſee a drunken woman ſtaggering along the ſtreets. The Ruſſian women are extremely fond of paint, and look upon a ruddy complexion as the very eſſence of beauty; ſo that in the Ruſſian language red and beautiful are ſynonymous terms. Perſons of diſtinction dreſs after the German and French manner, and are very fond of ſtate and ſplendour. The dreſs of the common people in Ruſſia is mean, but they are neat and cleanly in their apparel. Perſons of both ſexes wear a croſs on their breaſts, which is put on when they are baptized, and never laid aſide as long as they live. The peaſants' croſſes are of lead, but thoſe worn by the better ſort are of gold or ſilver. The peaſants let their beards grow to their full length. The Ruſſians ſeldom fail of bathing twice a week: for which purpoſe almoſt every houſe-keeper is provided with a bath; and he that has none of his own goes to the public baths. They often ſally out naked from the warm bath, run about in the cold, and roll themſelves in the ſnow; and then they plunge again into the bath: this viciſſitude of heat and cold they look upon as beneficial to the conſtitution, by rendering them hardy and robuſt. There is commonly a brick ſtove or large oven in every room in the houſe of a peaſant, which takes up the fourth part of the area, and is flat at the top and boarded; on which, and a kind of ſhelves round the room, the whole family ſleep. Their furniture conſiſts of three benches, an oblong table, and a picture of a ſaint or two. The peaſants are but vaſſals to the great, and groan under many oppreſſions; but they are ſo far from being dull and ſtupid, that they are remarkably acute and witty, and do not want for natural parts. The Ruſſian nobility formerly conſiſted ſolely of kneſes, or princes, and gentlemen. Bojar is not a title of nobility, but anciently denoted a poſt or office, as a privy counſellor, &c. Peter the Great added the titles of the counts and barons to the former; and, in 1714, ordered that the eſtates of the nobility ſhould not be divided; and alſo inveſted the proprietors with full power to leave their eſtates to that child or heir whom they ſhould think moſt worthy of the inheritance; however, this law was repealed in the year 1731. The nobility, with regard to unlimited ſubjection to their ſovereign, are on a level with the reſt of the people; neither does their rank entitle them to high poſts in the ſtate; but they are promoted only according to their merit. The Ruſſian language derives its origin from the Sclavonian; but differs greatly from it at preſent, and with regard to religious ſubjects, is enriched with a great number of Greek words. The alphabet conſiſts of forty-two letters; and moſt of them are Greek characters, as they were written in the ninth century. But as the latter did not expreſs every particular ſound in the Sclavonian language, recourſe was had to ſeveral Hebrew letters, and ſome arbitrary ſigns. There are various dialects uſed in the different parts of the Ruſſian empire, namely the Moſcovite, the Novogrodian, the Ukrainian, and that of Archangel. The Siberian dialect is much the ſame with the laſt. The Ruſſians profeſs the religion of the Greek church which was firſt embraced by the great ducheſs Olga, in the year of Chriſt 955, and afterwards by her grandſon, the great duke Wladimir, in 988, whoſe example was followed by his ſubjects. The inhabitants of the provinces conquered from Sweden profeſs Lutheraniſm, and the Proteſtants, of whom there are great numbers among the Ruſſians, as alſo the Papiſts, enjoy a full liberty of conſcience, and the public exerciſe of their religion; ſo that they have churches and prieſts or miniſters at Peterſburg, Cronſtadt, Moſcow, Archangel, and Aſtrachan: but the Papiſts have no longer the privilege of hanging up bells in their churches. The Arminians have their public places of worſhip only at Aſtrachan. A conſiderable number of the Ruſſian ſubjects profeſs the Mahometan religion, and greater numbers are ſtill Pagans. In order to promote their converſion, the ſynod has inſtituted a peculiar ſociety for propagating Chriſtian knowledge, called Collegium de propaganda Fide; and we are informed by the public papers, that many thouſands of them have been converted to Chriſtianity. There are great numbers of convents for the religious of both ſexes in the Ruſſian empire; but Peter I. very prudently ordered, that no man ſhould be permitted to enter on a monaſtic life before he is 30 years of age, and that no woman ſhould take the veil under 50, and then not without the expreſs approbation and licenſe of the holy ſynod. Before the reign of Peter I. the ſeveral branches of learning were but little known in Ruſſia; but that illuſtrious monarch ſpared neither expence nor trouble to diſpel the clouds of ignorance in which his ſubjects were involved, and to inſpire them with a taſte for arts and ſciences. That great prince founded an academy of ſciences, an univerſity, and a gymnaſium or ſeminary at Peterſburg, beſides other ſchools in the different parts of his empire; invited ſeveral perſons of diſtinguiſhed learning from Germany, France, and Holland, to ſettle at Peterſburg, collected a great number of books; and encouraged his ſubjects to travel into thoſe countries where arts and ſciences were known to flouriſh. Theſe wiſe and laudable meaſures are ſtill continued; and have cultivated many geniuſes among the Ruſſians, who have made a conſiderable figure in the republic of letters. The members of the academy of ſciences at St. Peterſburg, not only publiſh collections of their own memoirs; but compoſe a variety of books for the inſtruction of youth in the ſciences, beſides tranſlations of the moſt uſeful books publiſhed in foreign countries. All mechanic arts and trades are continually improving in Ruſſia; and thoſe improvements are not entirely owing to foreigners who reſide there, but even the natives are ſpurred on by emulation to equal, and ſometimes exceed, their maſters. Formerly, the Ruſſians were wholly employed in agriculture, feeding of cattle, hunting, and fiſhing. What they moſtly excelled in was making yuchte, or Ruſſia leather, which had been a ſecret of a long ſtanding among them; but they were entirely unacquainted with the more ingenious mechanic trades. Great numbers of excellent artificers having been invited to Peterſburg by Peter the Great, the Ruſſians ſhowed that, with proper inſtructions, they did not want a capacity for all kind of handicraft trades, for they have now flouriſhing manufactures of velvet, ſilk, woollen-ſtuffs, and linen; alſo copper, braſs, iron, ſteel, and tin, are wrought; and great guns, arms, wire, cordage, and ſail-cloth, paper, parchment, glaſs, gun-powder, &c. are made in Ruſſia. Ruſſia affords a variety of commodities, which are of great uſe to foreigners, and as the exports of this country greatly exceed its imports, there is a conſiderable annual balance of trade in its favour. The Ruſſian home-commodities are ſables, and black furs, the ſkins of blue and white foxes, ermines, hyenas, lynxes, ſquirrels, bears, panthers, wolves, martens, wild cats, white hares, &c. Likewiſe Ruſſia-leather, copper, iron, a tranſparent foſſil, called marienglas, or Muſcovy-glaſs, tallow, wax, honey, pot-aſh, tar, linſeed-oil, roſin, pitch, train-oil, caviar, ſalt fiſh, caſtor, iſing-glaſs, hemp, flax, thread, Ruſſia-linen, ſail-cloth, callimanco, matting, Siberian muſk, ſoap, feathers, hogs' briſtles, timber, &c. To theſe commodities may be added the Chineſe goods, as rhubarb and other drugs, ſilks, &c. with which the Ruſſians partly furniſh the other countries of Europe. The red and black juchte, or Ruſſia-leather, for colour, ſmell, and ſoftneſs, cannot be equalled in any other part of the world. The quantity of bar and other unwrought iron, annually exported from Ruſſia, amounts, one year with another, to 300,000 puds, each 36 pounds Engliſh. The goods imported into Ruſſia are ſilks, chints, and cotton cloth, and other woollen ſtuffs, fine linen, toys, French brandy, wines, herrings and other fiſh, ſpices, hard-ware, &c. The Ruſſians, at firſt, were ſtrangers to any courſe of exchange, which was not introduced among them till the year 1670; and money was ſo very ſcarce in this country, that foreigners were obliged to barter their goods for thoſe of Ruſſia, and even to give the Ruſſians money in exchange for their commodities. Moſt of the foreign merchants uſed to reſide at Moſcow, and took a journey in ſummer-time to Archangel, where they had their warehouſes and factors. This practice continued till the year 1721, when, by order of Peter the Great, the ſeat of commerce was transferred from Archangel to Peterſburg; and the foreign traders accordingly were obliged to remove their factories to the latter. The Engliſh enjoyed here conſiderable privileges in trade, ſo early as the reign of the czar Iwan Baſilowitz, which were renewed by Peter the Great, who gave them great encouragements, however, that monarch permitted them to ſend their goods only to Moſcow. In 1752, a treaty of commerce was concluded betwixt Ruſſia and England, by which it was ſtipulated that the Engliſh ſhould be allowed the privilege of ſending goods through Ruſſia into Perſia; but capt. Elton, an Engliſhman, having entered into the ſervice of Shah Nadir, in 1746, and built ſhips on the Caſpian Sea for that monarch, the Ruſſians put a ſtop to this trade to Perſia. The Engliſh ſtill have a conſiderable trade with Ruſſia, which exceeds that of any other nation. Ruſſia is by ſome called Muſcovy; but this way of ſpeaking is very improper. For to give this empire the name of Moſcovy, from Moſcow, its capital, is as abſurd as if we ſhould term it the Peterſburgian empire. The etymology of the word Ruſſia is uncertain. This, however, is certain, that before the 9th century the name of Ruſſia was entirely unknown; not the leaſt mention of it being made in the preceding ages. The Ruſſians are coloniſts in the country which they now inhabit. The aborigines, or ancient inhabitants, not only in Ruſſia, but all over Siberia, even as far as the borders of China, are called Tſhudi; for the ingenious profeſſor Muller, upon enquiring by whom the ancient buildings and ſepulchral monuments were erected, and whether they were the work of the Ruſſians? was every where anſwered by the inhabitants, that theſe monuments, &c. were ſet up by the Tſhudi, who in ancient times had lived in that country. B the Tſhudi, who, as the Ruſſian hiſtory informs us, inhabited the nor part of Ruſſia, antecedent to the preſent poſſeſſors, are properly the Finn Carelian, and Finnean Eſthlanders. The nation from which the Ruſſia derive their origin, were the Slavians, or Sclavonians, who firſt ſettled alon the banks of the Volga, and afterwards near the Danube, in the countri now called Bulgaria and Hungary. But, according to the account of th Ruſſian hiſtorians, being driven from thence by the Wolochers, or Wolo taners, that is the Romans, they firſt removed to the river Boryſthenes, o Dnieper, over-ran all Poland, and, as it is ſaid, built the city of Kiev Afterwards they extended their colonies farther north, to the rivers whic run into the Ilmen lake; confined the Finns within narrower limits; an laid the foundation of the city of Novgorod. The towns of Smolenſk an Tchernikov appear alſo to have been built by the Sclavonians. Indeed the dates of theſe events cannot be properly aſcertained. In the 9th cen tury, the Scandinavians, who were the Danes, Normans or Norwegians and Swedes, emigrated from the north, and croſſing the Baltic, came t ſeek for habitations in Ruſſia. They firſt ſubdued the Courlanders, Livo nians, and Eſthonians; and extending their conqueſts ſtill farther, the exacted tribute from the Novogrodians, and ſettled kings over them; an traded as far as Kiev, and even to Greece. They were called Wareger which name, according to M. Muller, ſignifies "ſeafaring people," an probably was firſt uſed by the Scandinavians, but afterwards by the Ru ſians; and with people unacquainted with the northern language, thi word came, in time, to paſs for a proper name. Not to mention othe etymologies, it may poſſibly be derived from the old northern word Wa that is war, and may be rendered "warlike." To theſe Warregers, th name of Ruſſes or Ruſſians owes its origin. The three Waregerian bro thers, Rurik, Sineus, and Truwor, were elected as chiefs by the Ruſſians After the deceaſe of the two laſt, Rurik became the ſole ſovereign. I the year of Chriſt 955, Olga, who was the conſort of his ſon and ſucceſſo the great duke Igor, was baptized at Conſtantinople; and, in the ye 988, Wladimir, Ruriſk's grandſon, likewiſe embraced the Chriſtian reli gion. The city of Kiev was the reſidence of all the great dukes or ſove reigns of Ruſſia till the 12th century. Jaroſlaw, who died in the ye 1055, divided his dominions among his twelve ſons. The Tartars, wh lived on plunder, took advantage of the weakneſs of the brothers on thi partition of the Ruſſian dominions, by making frequent inroads into the territories. Theſe incurſions, with the eſtabliſhment of the knights of t Teutonic order in Livonia, brought the great duchy of Ruſſia to the brin of ruin in the beginning of the 13th century. When the ſtate was in th utmoſt danger of being loſt, the brave and wiſe prince Alexander exerte himſelf againſt his enemies; and by his courage and conduct, partly i his father's lifetime, when he was hereditary prince, and partly after hi death, while he was great duke, reſcued his country from the calamitie under which it groaned. In the year 1241, he obtained a ſignal victory near the river Neva, over the Swedes and the Teutonic knights of Livonia and on that account he was honoured with the firname of Nevſki. In 1245 he ſucceeded his father, Jaroſlaw, as great duke; and after a glorious an happy reign, ended his days in the year 1263. In the 14th century Ruſſia fell almoſt entirely under the dominion of the Tartars and Poles and about the cloſe of the 15th century, Iwan Baſilowitz I. ſhook off th Tartarian yoke, ſubdued the petty princes of Ruſſia, and laid the fir foundation of the preſent grandeur of the Ruſſian monarchy. Peter I whoſe name will be remembered with honour to the lateſt poſterity, adde Livonia, Ingermania, and a part of Carelia, to his dominions by the peac of Nyſtadt. He alſo brought about a wonderful change in the manner of his ſubjects, built the city of Peterſburg, put trade and manufacture on an excellent footing, eſtabliſhed the right of the Ruſſian czar to nominate a ſucceſſor, took upon him the title of emperor, and by his action juſtly acquired the ſurname of Great. He finiſhed his glorious courſe i the year 1725. On the 5th of February, 1722, the emperor, Peter th Great, publiſhed an ordinance, by which the ſucceſſion was entirely to depend on the will and pleaſure of the reigning ſovereign; and this is th only written fundamental law with regard to the ſucceſſion in Ruſſia. Th power of the Ruſſian emperor is abſolute and unlimited. The ancient ſovereigns of Ruſſia ſtyled themſelves great dukes, and afterwards were calle czars; but Peter I. aſſumed the title of emperor, which was offered him by his ſubjects, and is now acknowledged by all Europe.

RYE, a ſea port town of England, in the county of Suſſex, on the borders of Kent, ſituated on the edge of a cliff, at the mouth of the Rother. The church is a very large building. On the edge of the cliff is a ſmall modern battery to annoy privateers, and behind it Ipres tower, a ſquare building, now a gaol. On the north ſide of the principal ſtreet was a chapel, belonging to the Auſtin Friars, ſettled here in or before the reign of Edward III. The weſt gate of the town has two round towers, like all the gates in this county and Kent. Rye has two markets weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday. It has formerly been one of the beſt harbours between Portſmouth and Dover, but is now, by the ſpreading of the river Rother, whoſe waters have not force ſufficient to repel the ſand brought in by the ſea, ſo choked with ſand, that ſeveral ſucceſſive acts of parliament paſſed in its favour had no ſucceſs, till 1726, when a new harbour was opened, wherein veſſels of 360 tons' burden may ſafely ride. In the reign of Richard II. the town was ſet on fire by the French; in the year 1725, George I. after a tempeſtuous paſſage from Holland, was obliged to put in here, not being able to make Dover. Rye is a member of the Cinque Port of Haſtings, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 37 miles SW. Dover, and 63 SE. London.

SAARBRUCK, or Saarburg, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and principality of Naſſau Saarbruck, on the weſt ſide of the Sarre. This town was ſet on fire, and its walls deſtroyed, by the Imperialiſts, on their recovery of it from the French, in the year 1676; but was again rebuilt, and now conſiſts of about 200 houſes, with a Lutheran and Calviniſt church. The prince's palace here was erected by prince William Henry. The county of Saarbruck is for the moſt part ſandy and woody, with here and there ſome good corn-land in it, but abounds in iron and pit-coal. The river Saar, and the road leading out of Germany to France, furniſh the country with great advantages for traffic. The doctrine of Luther was propagated here towards the cloſe of the 16th century. This country had once counts of its own, on the extinction of whom, in the year 1380, it devolved to count John of Naſſau, by his marriage with Johanetta, heireſs of Saarbruck: 16 miles W. Deux Ponts, and 61 W. Manheim. Long. 24. 37. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 14. N.—In the month of November, 1704, this town was taken by the allies, but retaken by the French in June following.

SAFAN, a mountain of Arabia, in the province of Yemen: 16 miles N. Dſjebi.

SAFFI, or Affi, or Azazi, or Aſſaffi, or Akſi, a ſea-port town of Africa, in the empire of Morocco, and province of Abda, ſurrounded with walls, flanked with towers, and defended by a garriſon. Saffi was long the centre of the commerce carried on with Europe. The French, who had ſeveral factories there, and who reſided there, confiding in the laws of hoſpitality, brought thence great quantities of wool, wax, gum, and leather; but the emperor having made Mogador a principal port, Saffi has no longer any trade. This town has a very fine road, where ſhips may anchor very ſafely, except in winter, when the winds blow from the ſouth or ſouth-weſt, for they are then ſure to be driven out to ſea. The environs of Saffi are a dry and parched deſert, and the Moors of the town rude, fanatical, and unſociable. There are a number of tombs, or aſylums of ſaints, at the entrance of this town, which have been made a pretext for obliging the Jews to enter it barefooted; nor was any Chriſtian till lately permitted to ride in on horſeback: 16 miles S. SAGADAHOC, a tract or diſtrict of New England, in the province of Main, granted by king Charles II. in the year 1634, to his brother, the duke of York, and thence formerly called The Duke of York's Property. This territory, or tract of land, was then deſcribed in the following manner: all that part of the main land of New England, beginning at a certain place called St. Croix, adjoining to Nova Scotia, in America; and from thence extending along the ſea coaſt, to a certain place called Pimaquin, or Pemaquid, and ſo up the river thereof to its farther head, as it tends to the northward, and extending from thence to the river Quenebec, and ſo up by the ſhorteſt courſe to the river of Canada northward. This territory was then annexed to the government of New York. But the duke, on the demiſe of his brother, Charles II. aſcending the throne of England, theſe lands, on his abdication, reverted to the crown. At preſent, the territory of Sagadahoc is ſuppoſed to extend from the river St. Croix eaſtward, to the river of Quenebec weſtward, and from each of theſe two rivers due north to the river St. Lawrence, which is its northern, and to the Atlantic Ocean, its ſouthern boundary.

SAGADAHOK, or Ameraſcoggin, a river of North America, which runs into the Kenebeck, in the country of Main, about 10 miles from its mouth.

SAGRES, a ſtrong ſea-port town of Portugal, ſituated on a tongue of land at the ſouth-weſt extremity of the province of Algarve: 5½ leagues WSW. Lagos, and 33 S. Liſbon. Long. 9. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 1. N.

SAGUA ISLANDS, a cluſter of ſmall iſlands near the coaſt of America, about 5 leagues from the Iſthmus of Darien. Long. 77. 59. to 78. 13. W. Greenwich. Lat. 9. 10. to 9. 25. N.

SAGUENAY, a river of Canada, which runs into the river St. Lawrence. This river is not above three quarters of a mile wide at its mouth, and about 80 or 90 fathoms deep; but higher up it is much wider, and this leſſening of its breadth at its mouth, gives it more than a common rapidity; though Charlevoix tells us, that it is navigable for the largeſt veſſels above 25 leagues from its mouth. The harbour is ſufficient to contain 25 ſail of men of war, has good anchorage, and is well ſheltered from ſtorms, being of a circular figure, deep, and ſurrounded at a diſtance with very high rocks. Long. 69. 40. W. Greenwich. Lat. 48. 4. N.

SAGUENAY, a diſtrict of Canada, bounded on the weſt and ſouth-weſt by the river of the ſame name, on the north-eaſt by a nation of Indians, called Kileſhinoas, on the north-weſt by that of the Eſquimaux, and on the ſouth-eaſt by the river St. Lawrence. The territory and lands on each ſide of the river were found ſo indifferent, and the firſt colony that ſettled ſuffered ſo much, that the French were for a long time diſcouraged from ſettling in Canada; but at length ſailing up as nigh as Quebec, they found freſh encouragement, and have ſince that time flouriſhed remarkably, till the whole country, together with Quebec, its capital, fell into the hands of the Engliſh, in the year 1759. It yields the greateſt plenty of marble of ſeveral kinds, ſo that even the houſes of private perſons are generally built with it.

SAGUR, a town of Hindooſtan, in the Malwa country, and capital of a circar of the ſame name, near the Bunnaſs river: 112 miles S. Agra, and 87 NW. Gurrah. Long. 78. 53. E. Greenwich. Lat. 23. 45. N.

SAHAM, a mountainous tract of Arabia, ſituated to the north of Yemen.

SAHARA, or Zaara, that is The Deſert, a country of Africa. This vaſt inhoſpitable region ſtretches itſelf from the Atlantic Ocean, on the weſt, to the kingdoms and deſerts of Barca and Nubia on the eaſt; and from Biledulgerid, on the north, to Nigritia and the river Senegal on the ſouth, comprehending a ſpace of about 500 miles in breadth, from north to ſouth, and at leaſt 1500 miles in length, from weſt to eaſt. The Arabians divide this immenſe tract of land into three general diviſions or claſſes, viz. Cahel, Sahara, and Aſgar: that is, the Sandy, Stony, and Marſhy Deſerts, according to the nature of the ſoil; but the moſt common diviſion is into provinces, which, according to Marmol and Leo, amount to ten; viz. the two territories of Nun, the Deſerts of Zanaga or Senegal, Zaaza, Zuenziga, Hayr or Targa, Lempta, Bardoa, Sate, and Abguechet. Later geographers, with more accuracy, diſtinguiſh the Deſerts into ſeven provinces only, under which are comprehended all the inferior diviſions; and theſe are Zanaga, Zuenziga, Targa or Hayr, Lempta or Iguidi, Berdoa, Bornou, and Gaoga. Theſe provinces or kingdoms are ſuppoſed to have been formerly inhabited by the Getuli and Garamantes, the former of which were likewiſe in poſſeſſion of Biledulgerid, or Numidia; and at preſent, it contains a variety of wandering nations, all proceeding from Arabs, Moors, or Portugueſe, who took refuge there when driven out of the empire of Morocco. All theſe bear indiſcriminately the name of Nars, Moors, or Arabs. Their manners are a compound of virtues and vices, they are at once hoſpitable and thieves. Their religion, as well as that of the Arabs, their oppreſſors, is Mahometaniſm; but ſo corrupted that little of the fundamental doctrine can be diſcovered among them. In different provinces they ſpeak different dialects of the Arabeſk or African language. The chief commodities of theſe countries are camels, horned cattle, horſes, dates, the fat and feathers of oſtriches, and the gum Senegal.

SAHEC, a town of Perſia, in the province of Farſiſtan: 37 leagues E. Schiras.

SAID, or Sahid, the ſouthern diviſion of Egypt, which borders on Nubia, anciently called Thebais.

SAIDA, or Seida, a town of Syria, ſituated on the coaſt of the Mediterranean, the remains of the ancient Sidon, formerly the reſidence of a pacha, now removed to Acre. The name of Sidon ſtill ſubſiſts in a ſmall village, about half a league from Saida. Saida, like all Turkiſh towns, is ill built, dirty, and full of modern ruins. Its length along the ſea ſhore is about 600 paces, and its breadth 150. On the ſouth ſide, on a ſmall eminence, is a fort, built by Degnizla. From hence we have a view of the ſea, the city, and the country; but a few cannon would eaſily deſtroy the whole work, which is only a large tower, of a ſingle ſtory, already half in ruins. At the other extremity of the town, that is, to the north-weſt, is the caſtle, which is built in the ſea itſelf, eighty paces from the main land, to which it is joined by arches. To the weſt of this caſtle is a ſhoal, fifteen feet high, above the ſea, and about 200 paces long. The ſpace between this ſhoal and the caſtle forms the road, but veſſels are not ſafe there in bad weather. The ſhoal, which extends along the town, has a baſon incloſed by a decayed pier. This was the ancient port; but it is ſo choked up by ſands, that boats alone can enter its mouth, near the caſtle. Fakr-el-din, emir of the Druzes, deſtroyed all theſe little ports, from Bairout to Acre, by ſinking boats and ſtones, to prevent the Turkiſh ſhips from entering them. The baſon of Said, if it were emptied, might contain 20 or 25 ſmall veſſels. On the ſide of the ſea, the town is abſolutely without any wall, and that which encloſes it on the land ſide is no better than a priſon wall. The whole artillery does not exceed ſix cannon, and theſe are without carriages and gunners. The garriſon ſcarcely amounts to 100 men. The water comes from the river Aoula, through open canals, from which it is fetched by the women. Theſe canals ſerve alſo to water the orchards of mulberry and lemon-trees. Saida is a conſiderable trading town, and is the chief emporium of Damaſcus and the interior country. The French, who are the only Europeans to be found there, have a conſul, and five or ſix commercial houſes. Their exports conſiſt in ſilks, and particularly in raw and ſpun cottons. The manufacture of this cotton is the principal art of the inhabitants, the number of whom may be eſtimated at about 5000: 55 miles W. Damaſcus. Long. 53. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 33. 25. N.

SAIGATKA, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Perm: 32 miles SW. Oſa.

ST. ALBAN'S, a town of England, in the county of Hertford, which owes its name to Alban, the firſt martyr in Great Britain, who ſuffered in the reign of Diocleſian, and was buried on a hill near the town, where a monaſtery was afterwards erected, and dedicated to his memory, by king Offa, as an atonement for the murder of his ſon-in-law, being before called Verulam. This abby was richly endowed by the ſame king, who obtained great privileges from the popes, eſpecially from Adrian IV. who was born in the neighbourhood, and granted the abbots the firſt rank among the abbots of England. In the year 1070, William the Conqueror ſeized it, and ſtripped it of moſt of its riches. At the diſſolution, it was valued at 2102 pounds a year. The church was bought by the town's people, and made parochial. In the year 1455, a battle was fought between the Yorkiſts, commanded by the duke of York, and the Lancaſtrians, in which the latter were defeated, the dukes of Somerſet and Northumberland killed, and the king himſelf taken priſoner. Another battle was fought between the ſame parties, when the Yorkiſts were commanded by the earl of Warwick, and the Lancaſtrians by queen Margaret; Margaret proved victorious, and reſcued the king her huſband from captivity. ST. ANDREW'S, a ſea port town of Scotland, in the county of Fi and before the reformation, a city, and the ſee of an archbiſhop, who w the metropolitan of Scotland. The original name was Mucroſs, but by chapel being built by St. Regulus or St. Rule, a Greek monk, who ca to convert the Picts about the year 370: it was called Kilrymont, or Kiru which is ſtill in uſe among the Highlanders. When the Picts were driv out by the Scots, it was called by its preſent name. At this time t metropolitan church, which under the Picts had been at Abernethy, w tranſlated to St. Andrew's; and the town was new peopled by a colony Scots, particularly by thoſe under the command of Fiffus Duffus, who great ſervices to king Kennet were rewarded with all the lands lying that ſhire, formerly called Pichtlandia, and which that captain, from h own name, called Fifland. The wall ſurrounding the priory is pret entire; it is filled with baſtions, ſome round and ſome ſquare. Part the prior's and ſubprior's houſes yet remains. Adjoining to the priory are the ruins of the cathedral, which was demoliſhed by a mob, inflam by a ſermon of John Knox. Both towers at the eaſt end are ſtill ſtand ing. One only of the weſtern towers now remains, and a part of the we end of the outermoſt ſouth wall. On the north ſide of the town, a littl weſt from the cathedral, on the brink of a perpendicular rock, are the ru ins of the caſtle, known by the name of Cardinal Bethune's, becauſe there he reſided, and therein was ſlain, in the year 1545, by Norman Leſley an his company. The inhabited ſtreets are three, running nearly from e to weſt, but not quite parallel, as they all terminate on the cathedral, the eaſt end. Theſe ſtreets are interſected at right angles, by narrow ſtreets, called wynds. On the ſouth ſide of the ſouth ſtreet, nearer t weſt end, is a much admired ruin of a chapel, belonging to a convent Gray Friars. St. Andrew's is a royal burgh, and for electing a memb of the Britiſh parliament, is claſſed with Cupar, Perth, Forfar, and Du dee. The government of the city is veſted in a provoſt, dean of gui and four bailies, who, with the town treaſurer, are called the office bear in the council, and are elected annually at Michaelmas by the whole cou cil. The great opulence of this city, before the reformation, may be co ceived from this ſingle circumſtance, that there was an annual fair her commencing in the beginning of April, which laſted for ſome weeks, a to which there reſorted from 200 to 300 veſſels from all parts of the commercial world. After the reformation, the city gradually fell i decay, from which it is now emerging. There are yet no exports fr St. Andrew's, grain only excepted. Several veſſels, from 40 to 200 to ha have within theſe few years been built at this port, which are employed by the inhabitants in the wood and coaſting trades. In the ſpring of 1792, a factory was eſtabliſhed for ſowing and tambouring muſlin. But the chief ſupport of this city is the Univerſity and the conflux of ſtrangers, who here find excellent teachers in all different branches. The univerſity, which is the oldeſt in Scotland, being founded in the year 1444, formerly conſiſted of three colleges, viz. St. Salvator's, founded by James Kennedy, biſhop of St. Andrews, in the year 1458; St. Leonard's College, founded by Prior Hepburn, in 1512; and St. Mary's founded by biſhop John Hamilton, in the year 1552. In each of theſe colleges were lectures in theology, as well as in philoſophy, languages, &c. In the reign of James VI. 1579, under the direction of George Buchanan, the univerſity was new modelled; and St. Mary's College was appropriated to the ſtudy of theology, and is, therefore, diſtinguiſhed by the name of the Divinity College, or the New College. In the year 1747, on a petition from the maſters of the two colleges of St. Salvator's and St. Leonard's, the parliament united theſe two colleges into one ſociety, under the deſignation of the United College. Theſe colleges are independent of each other in their revenues and diſcipline. Coal is in great abundance within a few miles of the city; much alſo is imported from both ſides of the Forth, chiefly from Dyſart, Alloa, and Borrowſtonneſs. The harbour has of late been much improved, and the mole extended farther towards the ſea. A ſpirit of enterpriſe has ariſen among the inhabitants; new houſes, on an improved plan of ſize, accommodation, and elegance, are yearly riſing, and there is every reaſon to believe, that St. Andrew's will continue to flouriſh, and will gradually regain its former luſtre. The number of ſouls in the town and ſuburbs is eſtimated at 2520, in the country part 1430, making in the whole a population of 3950: 21 miles ESE. Perth, and 26 N. Edinburgh. Lat. 56. 19. N.

ST. ANTHONY'S ISLAND, one of the largeſt and moſt elevated of thoſe called Cape Verd Iſlands, and, in point of ſituation, the moſt northerly. The top is conſtantly covered with ſnow, and, notwithſtanding the clearneſs of the ſky, generally hid in the clouds. On the north ſide it has a good road for ſhipping, with a collection of freſh-water, riſing from ſprings, which however ſcarcely merits the name of a pond. The inhabitants amount to about 500, chiefly negroes, under the protection of the Portugueſe. To the north-weſt ſtands a village, containing about 20 huts, and at leaſt 50 families, negroes and whites, under the authority of a governor; or, as they call him, a captain, a prieſt, and a ſchool-maſter, who trains up the children in the principles of the Chriſtian religion, and the firſt elements of knowledge; though that ſeldom exceeds being able to read the Bible in a bungling manner. They all ſpeak Portugueſe, copy the manners of that nation, but live in the moſt miſerable poverty, although the iſland produces a variety of fruits, oranges, lemons, palms, melons, bacovas, pomegranates, and the ſugar-cane. Here is a large orchard, diſtinguiſhed at ſea by a high palm-tree, where the ſailors come to gather the fruits of the ſeaſon, in which they never meet with any obſtruction from the natives. At a greater diſtance from the ſea, there is another orchard, from whence the natives bring fruit, upon aſſes, to the ſhips, which they ſell at a very low price. The potatoes and melons of St. Anthony are particularly excellent, having a richneſs and delicacy of flavour peculiar to them; theſe are therefore eagerly ſought after by the mariners. Long. 24. 53. It is built along the ſhore, at the bottom of a hill, in an oblong ſquare, divided into four ſtreets. Near it is the church and monaſtery of the order of St. Auguſtine. The caſtle, called St. John's Fort, is built of ſoft ſtone, has four baſtions, a courtin ſixty yards long, a parapet nine feet thick, and a rampart twenty feet high, caſemated, arched, and bomb proof. In 1586, Sir Francis Drake took it, and in 1665, it was plundered by captain Davis, the buccaneer. The Engliſh and Indians of Carolina attacked it again in 1702, under colonel Moore, who abandoned it after three months' ſiege, and plundering and burning the country, leaving the ſhips and ſtores to the enemy, in the ſight of ſome Spaniſh cruiſers, and marched back to Charleſtown, 300 miles by land. General Oglethorp was the laſt who beſieged it, in 1740; he bombarded both the town and caſtle, but was obliged to raiſe the ſiege. Long. 81. 40. W. Greenwich. Lat. 29. 58. N.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW, a ſmall iſland, in the Weſt Indies, ab eight leagues in circumference. This iſland was firſt peopled by Poinc the French governor of St. Chriſtopher's, at his own expence, in 164 As the ſoil is but indifferent, though the air is ſalubrious, the French we ſuffered to enjoy it without moleſtation, till the year 1689, when a deſce was made upon it by Sir Timothy Thornhill. The inhabitants had fo tified their iſland with batteries, breaſt, and other works, to the extent two acres of ground, doubly palliſadoed round with ſtakes ſix feet high: which were taken by Sir Timothy, who, having ravaged the country, ca ried off about 700 of its inhabitants, with their cattle and effects. T men were ſent to Nevis, and the women to St. Chriſtopher's: but t Engliſh government diſapproving of this ſeverity, ſuffered the inhabitan to repoſſeſs their iſland, but as ſubjects of Great Britain. At the peace Ryſwick, it was reſtored to the crown of France. During the firſt w with France, which broke out under George II. this iſland was ſo conve nient to the French for privateering, that above fifty Engliſh ſhips we carried into its harbour, and therefore two privateers from Antigua a tacked and reduced it, making priſoners 400 of its white inhabitants, whom 140 were fit to bear arms, and 300 negroes. The French afte wards returned to the poſſeſſion of it, and in the year 1785, ceded it to t Danes. Though little of the ſoil of this iſland is fit for cultivation, yet produces tobacco and caſſava, with ſome excellent woods and limeſton with which the inhabitants furniſh their neighbours. All the freſh-wa they have is ſaved in ciſterns; and the iſland itſelf is encompaſſed by fo midable rocks, which render it dangerous of acceſs to ſhipping. Its chi products for exportation are drugs and lignum vitæ. Long. 62. 40. W Greenwich. Lat. 18. 43. N.

ST. CHRISTOPHER, an iſland in the Weſt Indies, about 15 miles in length, and in general about four in breadth, but towards the eaſtern extremity not more than three, and between that part and the reſt of the iſland is a ſtrip of land three miles in length, which does not meaſure half a mile acroſs. This iſland was firſt diſcovered by Columbus, in the year 1493, who gave it its preſent name. It was called by the natives Liamuiga, or The Fertile Iſland. No ſettlement was made in this iſland till the year 1623, when an aſſociation was formed in England for this purpoſe, under the conduct of a Mr. Warner. Soon after the Engliſh ſettlement was begun, a party of French arrived in the iſland under the conduct of monſieur Deſnambuc. Hitherto Warner's firſt colony had lived on friendly terms, with the poor natives, by whom they were liberally ſupplied with proviſions; but having ſeized on their lands, the conſciouſneſs of deſerving retaliation made the planters apprehenſive of an attack, when probably none was intended. Accordingly they fell on the Charaibes by night, and having murdered, in cold blood, from 100 to 120 of the ſtouteſt, drove all the reſt from the iſland, except ſuch of the women as were young and handſome, of whom they made concubines and ſlaves. The two leaders, Warner and Deſnambuc, about the ſame time, found it neceſſary to return to Europe, for the purpoſe of ſoliciting ſuccour from their reſpective nations; and bringing with them the name of conquerors, they ſeverally met with all poſſible encouragement. Warner was knighted by his ſovereign, and, through the intereſt of the earl of Carliſle, ſent back as governor, in 1626, with 400 new recruits, amply ſupplied with neceſſaries of all kinds; while Deſnambuc, under the patronage of Richlieu (the miniſter of France) projected the eſtabliſhment of an excluſive company, for trading to this and ſome of the other iſlands. That miniſter concurred with Deſnambuc in opinion, that ſuch an inſtitution was beſt adapted to the purpoſes of commerce and colonization. Subſcriptions came in reluctantly, and the ſhips which the new company fitted out on this occaſion, were ſo wretchedly ſupplied with proviſions and neceſſaries, that of 532 recruits, who ſailed from France, with Deſnambuc, in February, 1627, the greater part periſhed miſerably at ſea, for want of food. The Engliſh received the ſurvivors with compaſſion and kindneſs; and for preventing conteſts in future about their reſpective limits, the commanders of each nation agreed to divide the whole iſland pretty equally between their followers. A treaty of partition for this purpoſe was reduced to writing, and ſigned, with many formalities, on the 3d of May, 1627; it comprehended alſo a league defenſive and offenſive. The flouriſhing ſtate of St. Chriſtopher's, which the Spaniards had always conſidered as the moſt valuable of the Caribbee Iſlands, awakened the jealouſy of the court of Madrid. Don Frederic de Toledo took upon him the command of a formidable fleet, conſiſting of 24 great ſhips, and fifteen frigates, to drive the two nations from St. Chriſtopher's, ſo as to prevent their diſturbing the Spaniſh colonie either in the Weſt Indies, or upon the continent. The French immedi ately abandoned the iſland, and the Engliſh hearing that their allies ha evacuated the iſland, fell into deſpondency likewiſe, and offered to tre with the Spaniſh admiral. All they could obtain was liberty to evacua the iſland, on pain of being put to the ſword. However, not many of th Engliſh had actually left the iſland when he departed; ſo that their ſet tlement went on as uſual; and they ſoon repaired the damage that ha been done to their plantations. The French, in like manner, who ha gone no farther than Antigua and Monſerrat, returned, and reſumed thei occupations: but they did not proſper like the Engliſh planters. It is probable that each nation would lay the blame on the other. We are told tha in the firſt Dutch war, in the reign of Charles II. the French king declarin for the United States, his ſubjects in St. Chriſtopher's, diſdaining an inglorious neutrality, attacked the Engliſh planters, and drove them out o their poſſeſſions; which were afterwards, by the treaty of Breda, reſtore to them. In 1689, in conſequence of the revolution which had taken pla in England the preceding year, the French planters in this iſland, declarin themſelves in the intereſts of the abdicated monarch, attacked and expelle their Engliſh neighbours a ſecond time, laying waſte their plantations, an committing ſuch outrages as are unjuſtifiable among civiliſed nations, eve in a time of open and avowed hoſtility. Their conduct on this occaſio was deemed ſo cruel and treacherous, that it was aſſigned by king Willia and queen Mary, among the cauſes which induced them to declare w againſt the French nation. After the French had continued about eig months ſole maſters of the iſland, the Engliſh, under the command general Codrington, returned in great force, not only compelled the Frenc inhabitants to ſurrender, but actually tranſported 1800 of them to Martinico and Hiſpaniola. It is true, that reparation was ſtipulated to made them by the treaty of Ryſwick, in 1697, but war again brea ing out between the two nations, in 1702, the French planters deriv but little advantage from that clauſe in their favour. They had, ho ever, in 1705, the gloomy ſatisfaction to behold many of the Engliſh po ſeſſions again laid waſte by a French armament, which committed ſu ravages, that the Britiſh parliament found it neceſſary to diſtribute t ſum of 103,000l. among the ſufferers, to enable them to re-ſettle the plantations. Happily, this was the laſt exertion of national enmity and civil diſcord within this little community; for, at the peace of Utrecht, t iſland was ceded wholly to the Engliſh; and the French poſſeſſions public ſold, for the benefit of the Engliſh government. This iſland contai 43,726 acres of land, of which about 17,000 acres are appropriated to t growth of ſugar, and 4000 to paſturage. As ſugar is the only commodi of any account that is raiſed, except proviſions, and a little cotton, it is probable, that nearly one half of the whole iſland is unfit for cultivatio The interior part of the country conſiſts indeed of many rugged precipice and barren mountains. Of theſe the loftieſt is Mount Miſery (evidently decayed volcano) which riſes 3711 feet in perpendicular height from t ſea. The general average produce for a ſeries of years is 16,000 hogſhead of 16 cwt. which, as one half only of the whole cane land, or 850 acres, is annually cut (the remainder being in young canes) gives nearl two hogſheads of 16 cwt. per acre for the whole of the land in ripe cane This iſland is divided into nine pariſhes, and contains four towns and hamlets, viz. Baſſeterre, the preſent capital, as it was formerly that of the French containing about 800 houſes; Sandy Point, Old Road, and Deep Bay. O theſe, the two firſt are ports of entry, eſtabliſhed by law. The fortificatio conſiſt of Charles Fort, and Brimſtone Hill, both near Sandy Point; thr batteries at Baſſeterre, one at Fig-tree Bay, another at Palmeto Point, an ſome ſmaller ones of no great importance. The preſent number of whi inhabitants is computed at 4000, and taxes are levied on 26,000 negroes and there are about 300 blacks and mulattoes of free condition. In th year 1782, this iſland was taken by the French, under the command o the marquis de Bouillé, and reſtored to Great Britain, by the peace o 1783. Long. 65. 38. W. Greenwich. Lat. 17. 25. N.

ST. EUSTATIA, or St. Euſtathius, one of the Leeward Caribbe Iſlands. This may be more properly termed a huge pyramidal rock riſin out of the waves, than an iſland; yet for its ſize, it is incomparably th moſt valuable of all the Caribbees. It has but one landing-place, an that, though difficult of acceſs, is fortified with all the art that can rende it impregnable, and nothing has been wanting, on the part of its maſter to make every inch of the iſland equally ſo. Tobacco is its chief produ and it is cultivated on its ſides to the very top of the pyramid, which te minates in a plain ſurrounded with woods, but having a hollow in the mid dle, which ſerves as a large den for wild beaſts. No fewer than 5000 whi people, and 15,000 negroes, ſubſiſt upon this iſland, and rear hogs, kid rabbits, and all kinds of poultry, in ſuch abundance, that they can ſupp their neighbours after having ſerved themſelves. The policy of the Dutc in the government of St. Euſtatia, exceeds that of all the other Europe nations who hold any of the Caribbees. They are jealous of admittin any ſtranger whatſoever into their harbour, and few beſides themſelv know any thing of the internal government or riches of the iſland, an more than that it ſerves as a ſtore-houſe for all kinds of European co modities. St. Euſtatia became a Dutch iſland by the right of poſſeſſion occupancy: and it was granted in property by the States-General, to ce tain merchants of Fluſhing. It was firſt ſettled about the year 1600; b during the wars between the Engliſh and the Dutch in 1665, the latter we diſpoſſeſſed of St. Euſtatia, by an armament from Jamaica. The Dutch a French becoming confederates, in the ſequel, the Engliſh were diſpoſſeſſe in their turn, by their combined arms: and the French maintained a g riſon in the iſland, till it was reſtored to the Dutch, by the treaty of Breda. Soon after the revolution, the French ejected the Dutch from St. Euſtatia, from whence they were in their turn driven by the Engliſh, under Sir Timothy Thornhill, who found it neceſſary, for the protection of the Dutch, to leave a ſmall Engliſh garriſon in the fort; but he granted the French no terms of capitulation, but for their lives and their baggage. The peace of Ryſwick reſtored the Dutch to the entire property of this iſland. In the year 1781, this iſland was taken by the Engliſh, and from them ſoon after by the French, but reſtored to the Dutch, at the peace in 1783: 3 leagues NW. from St. Chriſtopher's. Long. 63. 8. ST. GAL, a city and ſmall independent republic, ſituated in, and united with Swiſſerland; conſidered as one of the moſt ancient walled towns of Germany or Swiſſerland. Its government is ariſtocratical. It is divided into ſix trades or companies, to which is added that of Notten or Nothveſt Stein, conſiſting of gentlemen and traders, of good families. Beſides a great and leſſer council, here are other aſſemblies, compoſed of the whole body of the burghery. All burghers upwards of fourteen years of age, are likewiſe ſummoned, three times a-year, to make their appearance in the cathedral. The town is generally thought to owe its original to the abby, which, it is certain, has not a little contributed to its increaſe. In 1212, the emperor Frederick II. paſſing through this place, on a progreſs, admitted it into the patronage and protection of the empire, on condition of being aſſiſted by it in the matricula. In 1281, Rodolphus I. exempted it from being mortgaged by the empire, which valuable immunity was ratified to it by ſeveral ſucceeding princes. In 1417, on the payment of 2000 guilders, it obtained from the emperor Sigiſmund, not only an exemption from its aſſeſſment to the empire, but alſo, in 1430, the penal and capital juriſdiction, and that its council ſhould be inveſted in the nomination of the reichvogt, who preſides at ſuch trials. In 1587, all the foregoing premiſes were confirmed to it by the emperor then reigning, and all the rights and claims of the abby, whether real or pretended, purchaſed in 1457, for the ſum of 7000 guilders, by a decree of the city of Bern. In 1566, it made over to the abby its right of nominating one-half of the members of its Hofgericht, and alſo the penal juriſdiction over it, and in lieu thereof, obtained thoſe prerogatives which it enjoys in the town and its courts. In 1454, it entered into a perpetual alliance with the cantons of Zurich, Bern, Lucern, Schweitz, Zug, and Glarus; thus becoming an incorporate town of the Helvetian confederacy. Accordingly, it ſends a repreſentative to the general diets, whoſe ſeat is next to that of the Abby of St. Gall. The precinct dependent on the town is of no great extent, being on all ſides environed by the territories of the abby. This precinct alſo produces neither grain nor wine, nor has it any paſtures for the breeding of cattle, the meadows here being all converted into bleaching-grounds or gardens. For ſome hundred years paſt, St. Gall has enjoyed a conſiderable linen trade, and for the improvement of it the regency maintains eight bleaching-grounds, with ſeveral fulling-mills in the neighbourhood, along the river Sittern. The inhabitants here are Calviniſts: 16 miles SSE. Conſtance. Long. 27. 5. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 29. N.

The abbot is mitred, and ranks as a prince of the empire, but pays no aſſeſſment, and is ſubject only to the pope. The abby is ſaid to have riſen from a cell built here, in the 17th century, by St. Gallus, whom ſome make a native of Ireland, and others of Scotland, and this cell induced his diſciples to make themſelves dwellings near the manſion of their venerable teacher. The firſt abbot was Ottmayer, who was created ſuch in the year 1720. By virtue of the perpetual community of defence, and municipal and territorial rights, made with the confederate cantons of Zurich, Lucerne, Schweitz, and Glarus, the abby was admitted as an incorporated place, and as the firſt among them, and enjoys alſo both ſeat and voice in the general diets and meetings of the confederacy, which are granted to its deputies immediately after thoſe of Appenzell. The four above-mentioned cantons alternately appoint one of their council every two years, as hauptmann, or captain, in their name, and that of the abbot over all his vaſſals.

ST. HELENA, an iſland in the Atlantic Ocean, firſt diſcovered by th Portugueſe, who ſtocked it with hogs, goats, and poultry, and uſed to touc at it for proviſions, water, and refreſhments, in their return from the India voyages. Beſides quadrupeds, the Portugueſe brought hither fowl partridges, and pheaſants, which now run about the mountains in prodig ous numbers; and planted a variety of fruit-trees, as lemons, oranges, an pomegranates, all of which, from the excellency of the climate, have in creaſed ſo amazingly, as to make many people imagine they were the indi genous and native growth of the iſland. But, whether they planted colony in it or not, certain it is, that it was totally abandoned when th Dutch firſt took poſſeſſion; and that not a Portugueſe was found on th iſland, when, in the year 1600, the Engliſh became its maſters. After th Engliſh had once got poſſeſſion of St. Helena, they maintained it withou diſturbance till the year 1673, when the Dutch took it by ſurprize, but di not long enjoy the fruits of their conqueſt, for it was retaken a ſhort tim afterwards, by the brave captain Munden, with three Dutch Eaſt Indiame in the harbour. The iſland of St. Helena is about 20 miles in circumference, and the land ſo high, that it may be diſcerned at ſea above 2 leagues' diſtance. It conſiſts indeed of one vaſt rock, perpendicular o every ſide, like a caſtle in the middle of the ocean, whoſe natural walls ar too high to be attempted by ſcaling-ladders; nor is there the ſmalleſt beach except at the bay called Chapel Valley Bay, which is fortified with a ſtron battery of fifty large cannon, planted even with the water, and farther defended by the perpetual daſhing of prodigious waves againſt the ſhore which, without farther reſiſtance, makes the landing difficult; and a little creek, where two or three men may land from a ſmall boat, but no rendered inacceſſible by a battery. As there is no other anchorage but a Chapel Valley, touching here is extremely precarious; for the wind alway ſetting from the ſouth-eaſt, if a ſhip once over-ſhoots it, it is a matter of great difficulty again to recover the harbour. Notwithſtanding St Helena appears on every ſide to be a hard barren rock, yet on the top it i covered with a coat of fine rich mould, about a foot and a half deep, whic produces all manner of grain, graſs, fruits, herbs, roots, and every kind o vegetables, in the utmoſt perfection and plenty. After aſcending the roc which borders it to the ſea, the country is prettily diverſified with riſin hills and vallies; the firſt covered naturally with a great variety of herb and the latter adorned with elegant plantations of fruit-trees and garden among which are diſperſed the houſes of the natives; while herds of catt low about the fields, ſome of which are fattened for the ſupply of ſhippin and of the iſlanders, and the reſt kept for milk, butter, and cheeſe, and t afford a proſpect equally rich and delightful. Although no country produces finer crops of wheat, yet, amidſt affluence, they are liable to b ſtarved, and their crops totally conſumed by rats, which breed in incre dible numbers, and deſtroy every thing with all the deſolation occaſione by locuſts in ſome other countries. This, however, is an evil to whic certainly a remedy might be applied, as well as to the ſcarcity of wine, wit which commodity they are now ſupplied by the company's ſhips, and al with flour and malt. As the iſland is too ſandy, and the ſoil too thin f large trees to take root, it is extremely deficient in wood; and their ver houſes are ſent ready framed from England: but with regard to underwoo they have as much as is wanted in this warm climate. There are upon th iſland between 200 and 300 Engliſh families, or at leaſt deſcended fr Engl Engliſh parents, or ſome way allied to them. Some French refugees were likewiſe encouraged to ſettle, in order to propagate vines, and make wine, a point in which they have been by no means ſucceſsful. Every family has its houſe and plantation, on the higher part of the iſland, where they look after their cattle, hogs, goats, and poultry, fruit, and kitchen gardens, without ſcarcely ever deſcending to the town in Chapel Valley, unleſs it be once a week to church, or when the ſhipping arrives; at which time almoſt every houſe in the valley is converted to a punch-houſe, or lodgings for their gueſts, to whom they ſell their hogs, poultry, and fruits, receiving in exchange, flour, wine, and whatever neceſſaries they want, but they muſt firſt come into the company's warehouſe. The merchandiſe uſually laid in by the company are Cape wines, brandy, European or Canary wines, Batavia arrack, beer, malt, ſugar, tea, coffee, china-ware, Japan cabinets, callicoes, chintzes, muſlins, ribbands, wollen cloths and ſtuffs, with a variety of other particulars. The governor reſides in a fort with a garriſon, and centinels are always placed on the higheſt part of the iſland, to give notice of the approach of any veſſels. This iſland is ſituated about 400 leagues from the coaſt of Africa, and 600 from the coaſt of South America. Long. 5. 49. W. Greenwich. Lat. 15. 55. S.

This town took its name from Elerius or Helier a holy man who lived in this iſland, and was ſlain by the Pagan Normans, at their coming hither. St. Helier is ſituated at the foot of a long and high rocky hill; at the eaſt end is a well built populous town, greatly improved and enlarged within the laſt century. It contains about 400 houſes, moſtly ſhops, and near 2000 inhabitants, a ſpacious watering-place, and handſome town-hall. The market-place in the centre, is ſpacious, ſurrounded with handſome houſes, among which is the Cohue Royale, or court of juſtice. At the top of the market-place is a ſtatue of George II. of bronze gilt. The market is held on a Saturday, and much frequented. Long. 2. 8. W. Greenwich. Lat. 48. 38. N.

ST. JAGO, a town of North America, in the government of Mexico, and province of Veragua.

ST. JAGO, a city of South America, and capital of the kingdom of Chili. It is ſituated in a beautiful plain, of vaſt extent. The town is watered by the little river Mapocho, which is ſwelled in ſummer by the melting of the ſnow in the Cordillera, and in winter by the exceſſive rains; yet it is for the moſt part, fordable. Its water is always foul, which the inhabitants filtre through a kind of ſtone. For preventing inundations, they have built a wall and a dyke, by means of which, the waters are at all times conveyed for watering the gardens, and cooling the ſtreets. Beſides theſe, they draw larger ſtreams for driving the mills in ſeveral parts of the city. The ſtreets are laid out according to the four cardinal points; they are exactly in a line, and neatly paved with ſmall ſtones. The earthquakes, frequent here, have much damaged the city. The governor has the titles of preſident and captain-general, on account of his two employments of the gown and ſword. Beſides the cathedral, here are three pariſh churches, but ſmall, and eight monaſteries. At St. Jago, is the tribunal of the inquiſition of Chili, where the commiſſary-general and his officers reſide: 75 miles SE. Valparaiſo. Long. 53. W. Ferro. Lat. 33. 30. S.

ST. JAGO, a town of New Mexico, and province of New Leon.

ST. JAGO, one of the largeſt of the Cape Verd Iſlands, and one of the beſt cultivated, and moſt fertile; about 20 leagues in circumference. The people in general are black, or at beſt of a mixed colour, except a few of the better rank, the governor, the biſhop, ſome gentlemen, who trade or live upon their plantations, and the padres; though many of the latter are blacks. Cotton is produced in ſuch abundance in St. Jago, that beſides the quantities ſent to the Brazils, and ſold to the European nations, almoſt all the natives are clothed with this manufacture. Here are vines, of which the natives make a wine that is not contemptible; but as they are ſupplied with better by the European ſhipping, it has fallen into diſrepute. The chief fruits of the iſland, beſides a profuſion of plantanes, are citrons, lemons, oranges, muſk, and water-melons, limes, guavas, pomegranates, quinces, cuſtard-apples, papas, &c. The chief animals bred in this iſland are cows, horſes, aſſes, mules, deer, hogs, goats, and black-faced monkies, with long tails. Of the feather kind, there are found cocks, hens, ducks, Guinea hens, both tame and wild; parroquets, parrots, pigeons, turtle-doves, crab-catchers, curlieus, and a variety of others, valuable only for their plumage. The chief towns are St. Jago and Praya. Long. 23. W. Greenwich. Lat. 15. N.

ST. JAGO, a ſea-port town, and capital of the iſland of St. Jago, and of all the Cape de Verd Iſlands; the reſidence of the governor, and ſee of a biſhop. It ſtands diſperſed upon the declivity of two hills, between which there is a deep valley, 200 yards wide towards the ſea, but gradually decreaſing in breadth, as it retires from the ſhore, in a triangular form, the coaſt making the baſe. In this vally, cloſe by the ſea, there is a kind of ſtreet that runs parallel with the ſea, acroſs the vally, and houſes on both ſides that are watered by a rivulet, which falls into a fine ſandy bay, where the ſea is always ſmooth and even as glaſs. This forms a convenient watering-place for ſhips, though the entrance be in a manner blocked up (except to good pilots) by a chain of rocks. Near the landing-place ſtands a ſmall fort, almoſt level with the ſea, in which is kept a conſtant guard, regularly relieved. On the very ſummit of the hill, behind the town, is erected another fort, apparently well garriſoned, and mounted with heavy cannon. The town conſiſts of about 300 houſes, a church, and a convent, all built of rough ſtone, and greatly ſuperior in architecture and convenience to thoſe of the other iſlands. Beſides the accidental ſhips of other nations which touch here, there are two Portugueſe veſſels, which take it yearly in their way to Brazil. Theſe vend among the inhabitants all kinds of European commodities, and take in exchange the principal manufacture of the iſland, ſtriped cotton, which they again ſell to good advantage in the Brazils. Beſides this, one ſhip comes directly from Portugal, to take in a cargo of ſugar, in exchange for the manufactures of Europe.

ST. JAGO, a town of the iſland of Cuba, ſituated near the ſouth coaſt, with a good harbour, ſituated on a bay, about two leagues from the ſea, and long conſidered as the capital of the iſland, but much reduced from its former ſplendour. ST. JAGO DEL ESTERO, a town of South America, capital of the country of Tucuman, and ſee of a biſhop. It is ſituated on the banks of the Dolce, which is here pretty large, and navigable for veſſels of burthen, and affording a plenty and variety of fiſh. The town conſiſts only of 300 houſes, or 500 families, and is quite without walls, ditch, or other fence. The inhabitants are moſtly meſtichos, and mulattos, of a dark yellow complexion, lazy and ſickly, from the heat of the climate, and addicted more to pleaſure than to any traffic or work. The town ſtands on a flat, but ſurrounded with foreſts, which cauſe a ſtagnation of the air. It has hardly 300 men fit to bear arms, including all the inhabitants. The women are generally handſome, but moſt of them are troubled with ſwellings, or wens in the throat. The neighbouring country produces plenty of wheat, rice, barley, fruits of all ſorts, particularly figs and raiſins. The foreſts yield plenty of game, but are alſo infeſted with tygers, and other beaſts of prey, particularly guanacos, of the ſize of a horſe, in whoſe maw is found the occidental bezoar. Long. 47. 28. ST. KILDA, an iſland in the North Sea, and the moſt weſterly belonging to Great Britain, there being as yet diſcovered no land between it and North America. Its ancient name was Herta; it is about 3 miles in length; the ſoil fertile, the little vallies delightful, and the air ſalubrious and pure. There is an ancient fort in the ſouth end of the bay, called Dunſir Volg. The arable land hardly exceeds eighty acres; but more might be added. Theſe produce plentifully, either corn, barley, or potatoes, and rye; of which the tackſman ſhares liberally every year. The hills and paſture-grounds are fully ſtocked with cows, ſheep, and lambs. About 27 families reſide on this iſland conſtantly; and, perhaps, the moſt uſeful people on earth to enrich their maſter, by their induſtry in the fields, and their unrivalled alertneſs among the rocks. There are four or five hills in the iſland, but Congara is, without exaggeration, the higheſt, and a real prodigy of its kind; it commands a tract of ſea and land more than 140 miles in extent, Its perpendicular height was found by Mr. Macaulay to be 900 fathoms. There is only one landing place around all the iſland, and even there, except in a calm, there is no landing; while the reſt of the iſle is ſurrounded by the moſt tremendous rocks, hanging perpendicularly over the boiſterous ocean; the moſt aweful that ever the eye beheld. The art of the St. Kildains at catching fowls under the cloud of night is truly aſtoniſhing, and their ſucceſs no leſs wonderful. The ſolan gooſe, after the hard toil of the day at fiſhing without intermiſſion, riſing high in the air to get a full ſight of the fiſh that he marks out for his prey before he pounces upon it, and each time devouring it before he riſes above the ſurface, becomes ſo fatigued at night, that he ſleeps quite ſound, in company with ſome hundreds, who mark out ſome particular ſpot in the face of the rocks, to which they repair at night, and think themſelves ſecure under the protection of a centinel, who ſtands awake to watch their lives, and give the alarm, by bir, bir, in time of danger, to awaken thoſe under his guard. The St. Kildains watch with great care on what part of the iſland theſe birds are moſt likely to alight at night: and this they know by marking out on which ſide of the iſland fiſh are, among which the geeſe are at work the whole day; becauſe in that quarter they are ready to betake themſelves to ſleep at night. And when they are fairly alighted, the fowlers repair to the place with their panniers, and ropes of thirty fathoms in length to let them down, with profound ſilence, in their neighbourhood, to try their fortunes among the unwary throng. The fowlers thus let down by one or more men, who hold the rope leſt he ſhould fall over the impending rocks into the ſea, with a white towel about his breaſt, calmly ſlides over the face of the rocks till he has a full view of the centinel; then he gently moves along on his hands and feet, creeping very ſilently to the ſpot where the centinel ſtands on guard. If he cries bir, bir, the ſign of an alarm, he ſtands back; but if he cries grog, grog, that of confidence, he advances without giving an alarm, becauſe the gooſe takes the fowler for one of the ſtraggling geeſe coming into the camp, and ſuffers him to advance. Then the fowler very gently tickles one of his legs, which he lifts and places on the palm of his hand; he then as gently tickles the other, which in like manner is lifted and placed on the hand. He then, no leſs artfully than inſenſibly, moves the centinel near the firſt ſleeping gooſe, which he puſhes with his fingers; on which he awakes, and finding the centinel ſtanding above him, he immediately falls to fighting him for his ſuppoſed inſolence. This alarms the whole camp, and inſtead of flying off, they all begin to fight through the whole company; while, in the mean time, the common enemy, unſuſpected, begins in good earneſt to twiſt their necks, and never gives up till the whole are left dead on the ſpot. Both men and women delight much in ſinging; and their voices are abundantly tuneful. Their genius and natural vein for poetry is no wiſe inferior to the other natives of the Hebrides. Their ſongs are wonderfully deſcriptive, and diſcover great ſtrength of fancy. The ſubjects of their ſongs are the accompliſhments of their fair friends among the female ſex, and the heroic actions of their fowlers in climbing rocks, catching fowls, and fiſhing, and melancholy deaths over the rocks. The men and women dreſs in the ſame form that the Hebrideans do, and are poſſeſſed of an equal ſhare of pride and ambition of appearing gay on Sundays and holidays with other people. Their language is Galic, unadulterated, having no communication with ſtrangers to corrupt it with other languages. This iſland will continue to be famous from its being the place of impriſonment of the hon. lady Grange, who was, by private intrigue, carried out of her own houſe, and violently put on board a veſſel at Leith, unknown to any of her friends, and kept here till her death: 15 miles WNW. from the north point of South Uiſt. Long. 8. 18. It is navigable for large ſhips as far as Quebec, which is 400 miles from its mouth.

ST. LUCIA, or St. Alouſie, an iſland in the Weſt Indies. This iſland exhibits a variety of hills, and amongſt others, two that are remarkably round and high, ſaid to be volcanos. At the bottom of theſe are plains, finely watered with rivers, and very fertile. The air, by the diſpoſition of the hills, which admit the trade winds into the iſland, is found to be very healthy: The ſoil produces trees, which are fit for building houſes and wind-mills, and have often been employed for that purpoſe by both the French and the Engliſh planters. It likewiſe affords cocoa and fuſtic. It is provided with many bays and harbours, the chief of which, called the Little Carenage, accounted the beſt in all the Caribbees. The Engliſh were ſettled upon St. Lucia, where they had lived ſome time, when, in the year 1638, the Caribbeans, inſtigated by the French, either killed, or drove from the land, all the Engliſh ſettlers, with their governor. Their enmity to the Engliſh was founded on the following incident: an Engliſh veſſel, lying at Dominica, under a French flag, the Caribbeans, taking her for a ſhip of that nation, came on board to traffic as uſual, but being firſt intoxicated, were kidnapped by the captain, who forthwith ſet ſail, in order to carry them off the iſland. The ſavages, perceiving his treachery, leaped over-board, and ſwam aſhore, all but two, whom the Engliſh captain put in irons, and ſold for ſlaves. When the civil wars broke out in England, a party of French arrived here, under one Rouſſelan, well provided with ſtores and ammunition. Rouſſelan having married a Caribbee woman, was very agreeable to the ſavages, who not only left him and his colony unmoleſted, but even favoured them with an advantageous trade. All the good fortune of the French upon this iſland, however, ended with the life of Rouſſelan, who died in 1654, and was ſucceeded by La Riviere, who, with the reſt of the colony, was maſſacred by the Caribs. Some more attempts were made both by the Engliſh and French to form a ſettlement, but from mutual jealouſy between the two countries, neither were ſucceſsful, and both courts agreed to conſider it as neutral, till, in the year 1763, it was ceded to France. The Engliſh took it in the year 1779, but reſtored it at the peace in the year 1783. In the year 1794, it was again taken by the Engliſh, under the command of Sir Charles Grey and Sir John Jervis. Long. 60. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 13. 37. N.—In the year 1795, this iſland was evacuated by the Britiſh troops, and again taken in the year 1797.

ST. MALO, a ſea-port town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict in the department of the Ille and Vilaine, ſituated on a ſmall iſland, joined to the continent by a mole, at the head of which is a ſtrong fort. Before the revolution, it was the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Tours, who was lord of the town. The harbour is large, and one of the moſt frequented of France, though at low water almoſt dry, and at all times difficult to enter, on account of the rocks which ſurround it. The place is ſtrong by its ſituation on a peninſula, almoſt ſurrounded by the ſea, and having no communication with the land, but by a narrow mole, or cauſeway, of about 600 or 700 yards in length; and it has alſo 250 pieces of cannon mounted on its ramparts. It has no outworks, and its fortifications are ſuch as could not ſuſtain a regular ſiege for any length of time, but it is ſtrong by nature and art towards the ſea. During the wars between Henry IV. of France, and the partizans of the League, in the year 1590, the inhabitants of St. Malo, apprehending that their governor intended to declare for the king, and admit his troops into the town, found means to ſurprize the caſtle; and having murdered the governor, and divided among them his treaſures, which were very conſiderable, openly eſpouſed the intereſt of the league: yet they would not receive a garriſon into the town; but, on the contrary, kept the caſtle in their own hands till the end of the war. In 1594, the king's arms being attended with great ſucceſs, they ſent deputies to wait on his majeſty, who ſurrendered the town to him on favourable terms. St. Malo has always been a port for privateers, and has, conſequently, been very troubleſome to the trade of England. In the year 1693, it was bombarded by the Engliſh, under captain Benbow, by which ſome damage was done to the town. Some other attempts have been made, but without ſucceſs: 8 poſts N. Rennes, and 46 W. Paris. Long. 15. 39. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 39. N.

The inhabitants hardly amount to 6000; without heroes, without conquerors, without parade, they have enjoyed repoſe and liberty near 14 centuries. The following is ſaid to be the origin of this ſmall ſtate. A maſter maſon, by name Marino, betook himſelf to a lonely mountain, where his auſtere ſolitary liſe, gained him ſuch a reputation of eminent ſanctity, that the princeſs of the country made him a grant of the mountain; whereupon a conſiderable number of people ſettling there, in time formed a particular ſtate, which, from its devout founder, was called St. Marino. In the year 1100, the republic purchaſed the caſtle of Pennaroſta, in its neighbourhood, and, in 1170, another called Caſalo. About 290 years after, it aſſiſted pope Pius II. againſt Malateſta, lord of Rimini; in return for which ſervice, he made over to it the four ſmall caſtles of Serravalle, Faetano, Mont Giardino, and Fiorentino, together with the village of Piagge. At this period may be fixed the epocha of its higheſt grandeur, but now it is reduced to its original limits. In the year 1739, at the deſire of ſome of the dependents of Cardinal Alberoni, the Pope's legate at Ravenna, it was ſubjected to the ſee of Rome; but upon complaint of the council, the pope was pleaſed to reſtore it to its former freedom. The government conſiſts of a council of 40 perſons, the one half nobles, and the other half commoners. But on very important affairs, an arengo, or great council is convened; and every family has the privilege of ſending a repreſentative. The chief officers of this free ſtate are two capitani, who are changed every half year; a commiſſioner, who tries both civil and criminal caſes, and muſt always be a foreigner; a doctor of laws, whoſe office is triennial; and a phyſician, who alſo muſt be a foreigner, and is choſen only for three years, to attend the ſick, and to inſpect all apothecaries' ſhops.

ST. MARTIN, an iſland in the Weſt Indies, about five leagues i length, and four in its greateſt breadth. This iſland is chiefly valuab for its ſalt-pits, and ſalt-water lakes, which the Spaniards thought ſo conſiderable, that they built a fort upon the iſland to protect them, and to prevent other nations from making a ſettlement. In the year 1650, when th affairs of Old Spain were in great diſorder, the garriſon of this fort, being no longer able to maintain themſelves, blew it up, and deſtroyed, at th ſame time, all their houſes and ciſterns. The French, upon their retiring ſet up a claim of pre-occupancy, and endeavoured to get poſſeſſion of th iſland, but were thwarted by the Dutch; and an accommodation bein propoſed, the iſland was divided between them; the French entering int poſſeſſion of the moſt pleaſant part of it, which looks towards Anguill while the Dutch occupied the moſt profitable, becauſe it contained the ſalt-pits and ponds above-mentioned. This quarter was ſoon filled with commodious buildings, and capacious ſtore-houſes, while that of the Frenc remained poor and ill-provided, and in the year 1689, was plundered b Sir Timothy Thornhill. The Dutch part would have proved a flouriſhin colony, had it not been deſtitute of a good harbour, and lain too far t leeward, to carry on a convenient commerce with the windward iſlan In 1744, a handful of Engliſh, headed by the deputy-governor of Anguil with two St. Chriſtopher's privateers, drove the French from the poſſeſſi of their part of the iſland, and it has been ever ſince conſidered as belongi half to the Dutch, and half to the Engliſh. Long. 62. 55. ST. MAURA, or Leucadia. In addition to what was ſaid under the article Leucadia: This iſland was anciently a peninſula, connected with the continent of Acarnania; but the Carthaginians, or, according to others, the Corinthians, ſevered it, inſomuch that at preſent betwixt the iſland and the continent there is a channel, about 50 paces broad. It produces great plenty of game, wine, oil, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, and other fruits, with fine paſtures. The inhabitants are Greeks, ſubject to a biſhop. In this iſland were formerly three conſiderable towns, with a moſt magnificent temple of Venus. The town of St. Maura, which gives name to the iſland, contains about 5000 or 6000 inhabitants; and being ſituated in the water, and defended by walls and towers, is ſo fortified, that there is no convenient approach to it, either by land or water. Beyond its works, in a moraſs, are two well-inhabited iſlands, or ſuburbs. The little iſlands betwixt this and the continent communicate by bridges. In 1473, the Turks diſpoſſeſſed the Grecian emperor of the town and iſland. In 1502, the Venetians made themſelves maſters of it, but afterwards ſurrendered it again to the Turks, and in 1684 recovered it from them. In 1715, the town and iſland fell a ſecond time into the hands of the Turks; but the following year the Venetians drove them out, and have ever ſince kept a proveditore here.

The greateſt part of the houſes are of ſtone, and of them tiled. The town is ſurrounded by ſuburbs, inhabited by India whoſe cottages make a very mean appearance; but the houſes in the to are neat and uniform, though they are but low, having only a ground-flo except thoſe in the ſquare, which have one ſtory. The pariſh church i large and elegant ſtructure, and well ornamented. Here are alſo conven of Franciſcans, and Dominicans, and the Fathers of Mercy, a college, a a nunnery of the order of the Conception.

ST. MIGUEL D'IBARRA, a juriſdiction of South America, in government of Terra Firma, and audience of Quito. It formerly co tained that of Otabalo, but on account of its prodigious extent the latt was ſeparated from it. The temperature of the air is different in all villages of this juriſdiction, but in moſt warm, on account of their low ſi ations. Moſt of the farms have plantations of ſugar-canes, and mills extracting the juice, from whence they make large quantities of very wh ſugar. Some of the farms are planted with fruits, common in a hot c mate, and in others cotton only is cultivated, which here arrives at greateſt perfection. The ſugar-canes do not indeed ripen ſo well as in province of Quito, but they may be committed at any time to the m there being no neceſſity for cutting them at any preciſe time, retain all their goodneſs, even when ſuffered to ſtand two or three months a they are ripe; they are, however, cut every quarter at leaſt, and the m by that means kept conſtantly at work during the whole year. The fa ſituated in a leſs hot part of the juriſdiction, are ſown with maize, wh and barley. Here are alſo large numbers of goats, but not many ſheep. The Indians weave here a conſiderable quantity of cloth and cotton. This juriſdiction has alſo ſeveral mines of ſalt, which, beſides the home conſumption, ſupply the countries to the northward of it. In one part of this juriſdiction, near a village called Mira, are great number of wild aſſes, which increaſe very faſt, and are not eaſily caught.

ST. NICOLA, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria, ſituated on the Danube. Not far from it is a whirlpool in the river, the paſſage of which is difficult, on account of the many rocks under water there, but which, when the ſtream is low, appear above. This vortex is dangerous, as its draught is directed downwards; ſo that both ſmall and great ſhipping, which are too heavily laden, may ſink in it. When the river is high, this whirlpool is ſafeſt, for then the water runs off a great ſpace above the rocks, but the ſtream is at that time more violent and rapid, as it boils and runs ſtronger, and its extent is larger. This danger too is at that time heightened by a counter current, which joins it to the right, from what is called the Loch, which is a narrow paſſage, winding round the rocks, and at low water quite dry; but if the water riſes, ſmaller veſſels may there paſs through, and thus eſcape the vortex: 2 miles ENE. It is large, rich, and well built, but ſtands on ſuch diſadvantageous and even ground, namely, on an eminence of about 100 fathoms in heig formed by the eaſt ſide of the bay, as renders the acceſs to it very diffic by reaſon of its great ſteepneſs, which makes it neceſſary to have recou to cranes and other machines for conveying the goods up and down fr the city to the port. The plan of the Upper Town is as regular as unevenneſs of the ground would permit ; but though the ſtreets are ſtraig and of a good breath, moſt of them have ſo ſteep an aſcent, that they impracticable to wheel-carriages. The irregular and inconvenient ſit ation of the city does not, however, hinder it from carrying on the grea trade, and being one of the richeſt cities in the whole country ; and may add, that it ſo greatly contributes to the ſtrength of it, that it mi with a ſmall expence be rendered impregnable ; nature having form ditches and outworks, flanking one another in ſuch a manner, that ev inch of ground might be diſputed. The eaſt ſide is almoſt inacceſſib and the reſt well fortified, both by art and nature, and the avenues guar by ſeveral forts. The commerce of St. Salvador is very conſiderable, co ſiſting in linen and woollen cloths of all ſorts, hats, ſtockings, both of and thread, wheat, barley, meal, biſcuits, Port-wine, houſehold and kitch furniture, negro ſlaves, oil, cheeſe, beef and pork, ſalted ; in lieu of wh they export gold, ſugar, tobacco, ſnuff, Brazil wood, hides, tallow, bal of capivi, ipecacuana, and a great variety of other drugs. Theſe are co veyed up and down from the Lower to the Upper city, on ſledges dra up by cranes, worked by ſlaves. The Upper Town is adorned with ſeve ſplendid ſtructures, particularly the cathedral, which being dedicated St. Salvador, hath given its name to the city. It is a ſumptuous edif and not only adorned with fine carvings, gildings, &c. within and wi out, but enriched with golden croſſes, lamps, candleſticks, and other chu utenſils, of prodigious value. The palace of the governor is a very ſple did building ; that of the archbiſhop little inferior to it, and the court juſtice, hoſpitals, and other public edifices, are anſwerable to the rich of the place, whoſe extenſive commerce is greatly enhanced by its cor pondence with Rio de Janeiro, near which are ſeveral gold mines, rem ably rich. The king of Portugal will not permit ſtrangers to reſort hith in order to purchaſe the productions of the country, though they wo buy them with ſpecie, much leſs will he ſuffer them to carry their good St. Salvador, to ſell or barter. Long. 21. 45. ST. THOMAS, an iſland in the Atlantic, near the coaſt of Guinea, ſituated on the equinoctial line, of a circular form about 10 leagues in circumference, diſcovered by the Portugueſe in the year 1460. The climate is hot, moiſt, and unwholeſome, eſpecially to Europeans, few of whom ever arrive at the age of fifty, though many of the natural inhabitants live to complete a full century. At certain ſeaſons of the year, the ſky is quite darkened by thick fogs, which are diſpelled by the freſh winds that blow in the months of July and Auguſt. During the foggy ſeaſon, the Portugueſe have found by experience, that their only defence againſt its malign influence, is, keeping cloſe ſhut up in their houſes, till the air is purified and refreſhed by the north-eaſt winds, which blow from Ethiopia and Abyſſinia acroſs the continent. They have two winters, like all other places under the ſame parallels, but without the cold which diſtinguiſhes that ſeaſon of the year in Europe. What they here call winter is the rainy, or rather foggy ſeaſon, which is by far the moſt ſultry, hot, and intolerable of the whole year. They both begin with the vernal and autumnal equinoxes, or in the months of March and September, when the ſun's rays are directly vertical. The rains continue from December to February ; ſpring begins with our ſummer, in the month of May. For the firſt three months during this period the moiſt heat is altogether inſupportable to perſons neceſſarily expoſed to it ; we mean Europeans, for, as to the natives, it is life to them ; though when it comes to its height, even they begin to relax, grow faint and ſickly under it, and are ſcarcely able to drag themſelves along, or to touch the earth with their feet, unleſs defended by thick ſhoes. Now it is, that ardent and putrid fevers break out with incredible fury, ſweeping off the Europeans with all the violence and rapidity of a peſtilence. When the court of Portugal firſt thought of ſettling a colony in this iſland, they ſent a number of perſons whom they ſuppoſed capable of ſo important truſt ; and every man of them died in a ſhort time, by the intemperance the climate. Thoſe who ſucceeded them had the precaution to make ſom ſtay in Guinea, and afterwards at Angola ; thus by approaching gradually to render the effects of the change leſs ſudden and fatal. The conſequenc was, that they ſupported the climate of St. Thomas without any great diminution of their number, or inconvenience to thoſe who ſurvived. Th ſoil on the iſland of St. Thomas is clammy, viſcous, clayey, high-coloured frequently coarſe, and mixed with chalk. It does not eaſy crumble int duſt, on account of the moiſture it receives from the heavy dews that fa at night, which, at the ſame time water plants and render the ſoil prolifi The excellency and fertility of the earth appears from hence, that if a negro leave a plantation uncultivated or fallow but the ſhorteſt time, tree plants, and ſhrubs ſprout forth with amazing vigour. Theſe they conver immediately to uſe, by burning them to aſhes, which proves the ſtronge and beſt manure for ſugar-canes. This iſland produced neither ſugar-can nor ginger, before the Portugueſe planted and cultivated them, with gre care and labour. The Portugueſe have been no leſs aſſiduous in bringin wheat to perfection, which they imagined muſt flouriſh extremely in ſo ric a ſoil. Experience, however, has diſappointed their expectation, an proved the climate to be too moiſt, and the earth too viſcous, for bringin that vegetable to its full perfection. Rice and millet flouriſh here, an perhaps for the ſame cauſes that obſtruct the maturity of wheat. Vines the richeſt kind, melons, cucumbers, figs, ginger, all ſorts of roots, pulſ and pot-herbs, together with the fruits of every denomination of th warmer climates, are reared in the utmoſt perfection, with little labour expence. From their vines they make excellent wine, but in a ſmall quantity. The ſcarcity of wheat obliges the inhabitants to uſe rice, millet and roots, and chiefly the laſt, for bread. Yams, in particular, are foun congenial to the negroes, and prove a moſt delicious and wholeſome die The iſland of St. Thomas is well watered with freſh rivers and rivulets, a clear, light, wholeſome water, that greatly fertilize the ſoil. In the centre is a high mountain, covered with wood and fruit-trees, the top alwa crowned with ſnow, in ſuch quantities that it forms a number of rivulets which water the ſugar-cane plantations in the vallies at the bottom. abounds with a variety of animals, tame, and wild, as hogs, black cattle ſheep, goats, and a ſmall ſpecies of little red, or high-coloured, bay-horſe geeſe, guinea-hens, ducks, turtle-doves, fowls, thruſhes, partridges, ſtarlings, ſea-gulls, parroquets, with an infinity of the feathered kind ; ſom valuable for their plumage, ſome for their fleſh, and others for their voice and the melody of their ſong. In the ſurrounding ſea is an incredible variety of fiſh, from the whale down to the ſmalleſt fiſh that ſwims : nor ar the rivers leſs plentifully ſtocked. In a word, this iſland might equal an ſpot in the globe, did the temperature of the iſland correſpond in any meaſure with the abundance of its fruits, plants, and animals, as well as th diverſity and beauty of the landſcape. The inhabitants are of two ſort the outlawed and baniſhed Portugueſe, who were ſettled there at its fir diſcovery ; their deſcendants ſtill preſerve their fair complexion, with no very conſiderable alteration : and the Negroes retained in the ſervice of the Europeans, and ſuch as chooſe to reſide here from Angola. All the inhabitants, except a few negroes and ſlaves, are of the Roman Catholic religion, but full of bigotry, ſuperſtition, and ignorance. The eccleſiaſtical government is in the hands of the biſhop, who reſides in the capital, though his juriſdiction extends over the whole iſland, and is a ſuffragan to the archbiſhop of Liſbon. In the year 1641, this iſland was taken by the Dutch, who, however, were ſoon compelled to relinquiſh it through the inclemency of the climate. Long. 8. 6. E. Greenwich.

ST. THOMAS, a town of Hindooſtan, on the coaſt of Coromandel. Here was formerly a powerful city, called Meliapour, or Mailabour, the capital of the kingdom of Coromandel : partly on its ruins, and partly in its neighbourhood, the Portugueſe erected the ſtately city of St. Thomas, which is the reaſon that, notwithſtanding ſome travellers diſtinguiſh between the Indian and the Chriſtian city, yet moſt writers conſider them as the ſame place ; which, if it be an error, is however, not very inexcuſable. It was, and indeed ſtill is, inhabited by weavers and dyers, and noted for making the beſt coloured ſtuffs in India, which they tranſport to Malacca, Java, the Molucco Iſlands, Siam, Pegu, &c. The excellency of the dye is attributed to the peculiar quality of the water, which ariſes out of ſprings, in white ſandy ground, without any clay. It was deſolate at the arrival of the Portugueſe, who rebuilt it in 1545, and it increaſed to that degree in buildings and inhabitants, that in a few years it was one of the fineſt cities in the Indies. It is fortified with a ſtone wall and ſeveral baſtions, and has above 300 towns and villages under its juriſdiction. When it was in the hands of the Portugueſe, it was firſt ſubject to the ſee of Cochin, and afterwards made a biſhopric, under the archbiſhop of Goa. They had ſeveral churches, where the Mahometans and Pagans were inſtructed and baptized, beſides others, with two monaſteries and a college, where the Portugueſe and Malabar children were inſtructed. Next to the college was a very large pariſh, inhabited by none but converts. There is alſo the famous church of St. Thomas the Apoſtle, who, the Portugueſe ſay, was buried here, ere, and pretend to ſhow his ſepulchre on the top of a neighbouring ountain, over which they have built a ſmall chapel, that is ſeen off at a. The city had ſeven gates, and was very ſtrong, from its ſituation, ing covered by the ſea on one ſide, and a chain of mountains on the ther: yet the Moors took it, after a long ſiege, and are ſtill in poſſeſſion. The road is very ſafe from April to September, when the ſouth and ſouth-eſt winds blow, but not in the other ſeaſon, when ſhips of any conſidera-le burden are obliged to retire into ſome of the adjacent ports: 1 league Madras.

ST. THOMAS, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: miles NW. Grein.

ST. THOMAS, a town of Savoy, in the county of Maurienne: 3 iles N. Monſtier.

ST. THOMAS, the principal of the Virgin Iſlands, in the Weſt In-ies, about ſix leagues in circumference, belonging to the Brandenburgers nd Danes, the former under the protection of the latter. It abounds ith potatoes, millet, manioc, and moſt ſorts of fruits and herbage, eſpe-ially ſugar and tobacco, but is extremely infeſted with muſkettoes and ther troubleſome vermin. The Engliſh had formerly a ſpacious ſettle-ent on it, where ſome French exiles found a great number of perſons of oth ſexes who had been killed, but not ſtripped, by the Spaniards. Here re excellent kids, and all ſorts of wild fowl, but from the numbers of eople, and great plenty of money here, proviſions are, as is moſt com-only the caſe, dear. Dampier calls it a free port, and a receptacle or anctuary for privateers: and, indeed, the Daniſh monarch's ports, from is being generally a neutral prince, are open to the ſhipping of all na-ions. Here is a ſafe and commodious harbour, with two natural mounds pon it, calculated, as it were, for placing two batteries for the defence of ts entrance. Nearly in the centre of the harbour is a ſmall fort, without itch or out-works, and the town, which begins about fifty or ſixty paces eſt of it, conſiſts chiefly of one long ſtreet, at the end of which is the Daniſh factory, a large building with convenient warehouſes, for the ſtow-ge of the goods, as well as the reception of negroes, in which article they rade with the Spaniards. On the right ſide of this factory is the Bran-enburg quarter, conſiſting of two little ſtreets, full of French refugees rom Europe and the iſlands. Moſt of the houſes are of brick, being built nd tiled in the Dutch faſhion, yet but of one ſtory, on account of the oundation, where, before they dig to the depth of three feet, they meet ith water and quickſands. The trade of this ſmall iſland, particularly n time of peace, is very conſiderable: this being the ſtaple for ſuch traffic s the French, Engliſh, Dutch, and Spaniards, dare not carry on publicly n their own iſlands: and in war time privateers bring their prizes hither or ſale. In 1688, the Daniſh factory here was attacked and plundered by he French Buccaneers. Long. 64. 50. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 22. N.

ST. TRIVIER DE COURTOUX, a town of France, and ſeat of a tribunal, in the department of the Ain: 2 leagues ENE. Pont de Vaux, and 5¼ N. Bourg en Breſſe.

ST. TRON, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and bi-ſhopric of Liege, ſituated in the country of Haſbale, on the frontiers of Brabant, firſt ſurrounded with walls in the year 1058. Its ancient name was Sarcine, or Sarcinium, but received its preſent name from an abby, built here about the year 657, by St. Trudon, or St. Tron, a rich lord of the country. The magiſtracy is compoſed of two burgomaſters and ſeven echevins; the two former have a ſeat at the aſſembly of the province. In this city the comte de Brederode, with the reſt of the chiefs of the confede-racy, met together in the year 1566, to conſult of meaſures neceſſary for the ſupport of their cauſe, and took an oath of fidelity to each other. In the year 1568, the prince of Orange pillaged the abby, and compelled the abbot to pay 20,000 crowns for his ranſom: 14 miles NW. Liege, and 18 ESE. Louvain.

ST. VEIT, a town of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and arch-biſhopric of Salzburg, near the Salza: 28 miles S. Salzburg, and 14 W. Radſtadt.

ST. VEIT, or Fiume, a ſea-port town of Iſtria, ſituated near the Gulf of Venice, in a narrow plain, which yields good grapes, figs, and other fruits. The place itſelf is populous, and contains in it one collegiate church, and two cloyſters: without it, on the ſea, alſo ſtands a cloyſter. The harbour here is formed by the Fiumara. From this town large quan-tities of goods and wares are exported, a conſiderable part of which come from Hungary, and for the more commodious importation of them the emperor, Charles VI. cauſed an expenſive highway to be made from this place to Carlſtadt, in Croaria. A ſugar-houſe has alſo been founded here. St. Veit is exempt from taxes and contributions. Formerly, it was incor-porated with the duchy of Carniola; and with it bore all impoſts; but ſo early as the year 1648, it was no longer reckoned a member of the pro-vince of Carniola. It is under the direction of the regency of one of the land princes, ſtyled captain, who reſides at the citadel, but has no province belonging to it: 10 miles WNW. Circknitz. Long. 14. 46. E. ST. VINCENT, one of the Cape Verd Iſlands, about 10 leagues in circumference; in general lofty, except towards the north-weſt, where it is low and ſandy. In this part is a bay, a league and a half broad at the mouth, ſurrounded with high mountains, and ſtretching to the middle of the iſland, ſecurely ſheltered by the mountains from the weſterly and north-weſt winds, whence it is deemed the ſafeſt harbour in all the Cape Verd Iſlands; yet it is difficult of acceſs, by reaſon of the impetuous winds that blow off the mountains, along the coaſt with ſo much fury, as greatly to endanger ſhipping, before they can arrive at this place of ſecurity. Beſides this, there are ſeveral other bays on the ſouth ſide, in which ſhips may anchor: and of theſe the Portugueſe generally make choice to load their hides. St. Vincent has alſo good freſh water, which is ſeen to ſpring up upon digging a little way into the ſoil of the vally; but the hills afford not a ſingle drop; and this makes the iſland improper for cattle. The ſouth part of the iſland is ſituated Long. 25. 6. W. Greenwich. Lat. 13. 10. N.

ST. VINCENT, an iſland in the Weſt Indies, about 40 miles in length, and 10 in breadth. This iſland was only inhabited by native Caribbs, till, in the latter part of the laſt century, a ſhip from Guinea, with a large cargo of ſlaves, was either wrecked or run aſhore upon the iſland of St. Vincent, into the woods and mountains of which great numbers of the negroes eſcaped, whom the Indians ſuffered to remain. Partly by the acceſſion of runaway ſlaves from Barbadoes, and partly by the children they had by the Indian women, theſe Africans became very numerous; ſo that about the beginning of the current century they conſtrained the Indians to retire into the north-weſt part of the iſland. Theſe people, as may be reaſonably ſuppoſed, were much diſſatisfied with this treatment: and complained of it occaſionally both to the Engliſh and to the French, that came to wood and water amongſt them. The latter at length ſuffered themſelves to be prevailed upon to attack theſe invaders. After much deliberation, in the year 1719, they came with a conſiderable force from Martinico, and landing without much oppoſition, began to burn the negro huts, and deſtroy their plantations, ſuppoſing that the Indians would have attacked them in the mountains, which, if they had done, the blacks had probably been extirpated, or forced to ſubmit, and become ſlaves. But either from fear or policy, the Indians did nothing, and the negroes ſallying in the night, and retreating to inacceſſible places in the day, deſtroyed ſo many of the French (amongſt whom was Mr. Paulian, major of Martinique, who commanded them) that they were forced to retire. When by this experiment they were convinced that force would not do, they had recourſe to fair means, and by dint of perſuaſions and preſents, patched up a peace with the negroes as well as the Indians, from which they received great advantage. Things were in this ſituation, when captain Uring came with a conſiderable armament to take poſſeſſion of St. Lucia and this iſland, in virtue of a grant from king George I. to the duke of Montague. When the French had diſlodged this gentleman, by a ſuperior force from St. Lucia, he ſent captain Braithwaite to try what could be done at the iſland of St. Vincent, in which he was not at all more ſucceſsful. After this the country became a theatre of ſavage hoſtilities between the negroes and the Charaibes, in which it is believed that the former were generally victorious; it is certain that they proved ſo in the end, their numbers, in 1763, being computed at 2000; whereas of the red or native Charaibes, there were not left more than 100 families, and moſt of theſe are by this time ſaid to be exterminated. It is, however, worthy of remark, that the African intruders have adopted moſt of the Charaibean manners and cuſtoms; among the reſt, the practice of flattening the foreheads of their infants, and, perhaps, it was chiefly from this circumſtance that they acquired the appellation of the black Charaibes. St. Vincent being ceded to the Engliſh by the peace of Paris, in the year 1763, the firſt meaſure of the Engliſh government was to diſpoſe of the lands, without any regard to the claims of the Charaibes of either race; which, in truth, were conſidered as of no conſequence or validity. This gave riſe to a war with the Charaibes, in the courſe of which, it became the avowed intention of government to exterminate thoſe miſerable people altogether, or, by conveying them to a barren iſland on the coaſt of Africa, conſign them over to a lingering deſtruction. By repeated proteſts and repreſentations from the military officers employed in this diſgraceful buſineſs, and the dread of parliamentary enquiry, adminiſtration thought proper to deſiſt, and the Charaibes, after ſurrendering part of their lands, were permitted to enjoy the remainder unmoleſted. On the 19th of June, 1779, St. Vincent ſhared the common fate of moſt of the Britiſh Weſt Indian poſſeſſions, in that unfortunate war with America, which ſwallowed up all the reſources of the nation, being captured by a ſmall body of troops from Martinico, conſiſting of only 450 men, commanded by a lieutenant in the French navy. It contained at that time ſixty-one ſugar eſtates, 500 acres in coffee, 200 acres in cacao, 400 in cotton, 50 in indigo, and 500 in tobacco, beſides land appropriated to the raiſing proviſions, ſuch as plantains, yams, maize, &c. All the r of the country, excepting the few ſpots that had been cleared from tim to time by the Charaibes, retained its native woods. St. Vincent con tains about 64,000 acres, which are every where well watered, but th country is very generally mountainous and rugged; the intermediate val lies, however, are fertile in a high degree, the ſoil conſiſting chiefly of fine mould, compoſed of ſand and clay, well adapted for ſugar. The exten of country at preſent poſſeſſed by Britiſh ſubjects, is 23,605 acres, an about as much more is ſuppoſed to be held by the Charaibes. All th remainder is thought incapable of cultivation or improvement. The go vernor's ſalary is 2000l. ſterling, one half of which is raiſed within th iſland, the other half is paid him out of the exchequer of Great Britain The number of inhabitants appears, by the laſt returns to government, t be 1450 whites, and 11,853 negroes. Long. 61. SAL, or Salt, one of the Cape Verd Iſlands, about 40 miles in circumference, ſo called from the number of ſalt ponds, where the water cryſtallizes into a beautiful ſalt, the chief production to be met with here, where land is ſo barren as to bear no trees, no verdure, except a few inconſiderable ſhrubs. Dampier ſaw hardly a blade of graſs, and no other animals than a few ſmall lean goats, which bore all the marks of the poverty of the country; and yet, Davity affirms, that, notwithſtanding the apparent barrenneſs of this iſland, it produces incredible flocks of goats, ſome aſſes, a few ſmall horſes, and a great variety of ſea fowls. Perhaps the ravages of the buccaneers might have occaſioned their ſcarcity. La Croix obſerves, that a prodigious number of tortoiſes lay their eggs on this iſland, which alone would be ſufficient to maintain a number of inhabitants; yet all authors agree that it is a deſolate and deſert iſland. Long. 21. 59. SALAMANCA, a city of Spain, in the province of Leon, on the Tormes; the ſee of a biſhop, and a celebrated univerſity. It is ſituated partly in a plain, and partly on three hills, and contains, beſides the cathedral, twenty-five pariſh churches, thirty-nine convents, ſix hoſpitals, and about 7000 houſes. The ſtreets are narrow and dirty; the cathedral is one of the moſt remarkable churches in Spain. The univerſity, formerly ſo famous, to which ſtudents were ſent from all parts of Europe, has conſiderably fallen from its ancient ſplendour. According to the laſt form given it by the council of Caſtile, it has ſixty-one profeſſorſhips, without reckoning an anatomical theatre, and the college of the three languages, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. The edifices of this univerſity are compoſed of two parts, ſeparated from each other by a ſtreet. The little ſchools (Eſcuelas minores) are on one ſide; and on the other, the gates of the univerſity, properly ſo called. Another foundation, more modern than the univerſity of Salamanca, and more celebrated in the preſent age, is that of the great colleges, or colegios mayores. There are in Spain, ſeven houſes of education which bear this name. The moſt diſtinguiſhed youth of the kingdom are brought up in them; and thence it was formerly, that all thoſe who held places in the adminiſtration were taken. Such a diſtinction excited emulation amongſt the ſtudents of the colleges (colegiales) and the order of advocates, whoſe moderate fortunes were unequal to ſo illuſtrions an education.

tion. The latter have been lately fully revenged: ſince it was among them, the ſtate has found thoſe who do it moſt honour, and their triumph has thrown a ridicule upon their diſdainful rivals. The city of Salamanca alone contains four of theſe colleges. Over the river Tormes, is a bridge of twenty-five arches, built by the Romans: 100 miles NW. Madrid, and 70 S. Leon. Long. 10. 54. E. SALISBURY, a city of England, in the county of Wilts, ſituated on the river Avon, which here divides into ſeveral ſtreams, watering almoſt every ſtreet in the town. It is the ſee of a biſhop. The town was originally built on a hill, a ſituation originally choſen by the Britains, and continued by the Romans. In the reign of Richard I. the inhabitants removed to the preſent ſituation, and the foundation of the cathedral was laid in the year 1219 by biſhop Poor, who having ſent for architects from abroad, it was ſo forwarded by his ſucceſſors, that it was finiſhed in the year 1258, and conſecrated in the preſence of king Henry III. and many of the nobility and prelates. The fabric, which coſt above 26,000l. is the moſt elegant and regular Gothic ſtructure in the kingdom, being built in the form of a lantern, with its ſpire of free-ſtone in the middle, the talleſt in England, being 410 feet. On the outſide there is no wall, only buttreſſes. Its windows are ſaid to be as many in number as the days of the year. There are 88 bells, which are hung in a ſteeple erected by itſelf, in the church-yard, the walls of the ſpire, which are little more than four inches thick, being judged too weak for ſuch a weight of metal; ſo that there is only one little bell in the church, which rings when the biſhop comes to the choir. The city was firſt incorporated by Henry III. and increaſed ſo, after the deſerting of Old Sarum, the building of the cathedral, and the turning of the weſtern road through this city, by a grant from Edward III. that it ſoon became one of the moſt thriving cities in England. It is governed by a mayor, high-ſteward, recorder, deputy-recorder, 24 aldermen, &c. Beſides the manufactures of flannels, druggets, and the cloths called Saliſbury whites, for the Turkey trade here, it is noted for the manufacture of bone-lace, and of cutlery. SALLEE, or Salé, a ſeaport of Africa, on the Atlantic, in the kingdom of Fez. This town is ſituated in the province of Beni-Haſſen, at the mouth of the river Sallee, formed by the union of two ſmaller ſtreams, and was formerly a port capable of receiving large ſhips, but the ſand has now ſo choked up the entrance, that ſhips of 200 tons cannot enter it, till their guns and ballaſt are taken out. This town was taken in 1261, by Don Alphonſo X. king of Caſtile; but he was not able to keep it, the king of Fez retaking it immediately after. Sallee is a walled town, and has a battery of 24 pieces of cannon, which commands the road, and a redoubt which defends the entrance of the river. To the north we perceive the walls and ruins of a ſmall inhabited town, which Muley Iſhmael cauſed to be built for the families of his black ſoldiers. There are ſome docks for building ſhips at Sallee and Rabat; but the difficulty of navigating the channel, and the probability that the ſand will continue to accumulate, give reaſon to predict that very ſoon only veſſels with oars will be able to enter the river. The road of Sallee is only to be frequented in the fine ſeaſon, from the beginning of April to the end of September: when the wind blows from the ſouth-ſouth-weſt, which ſeldom happens, but in winter, this road is no longer ſafe; ſhips are expoſed to be driven out to ſea, and the ſhifting of the ſands of the bar, render any communication with the town extremely difficult: 42 miles W. SALONIKI, a ſea-port town of European Turkey, and moſt conſiderable place in the province of Macedonia, ſituated in a Gulf to which it gives name. This city was formerly called Halia and Therma, but Caſſander building it anew, gave it the name of his ſpouſe Theſſalonica, who was ſiſter to Alexander the Great. To its admirable ſituation for trade, is probably owing all the regard which the ſeveral conquerors of Macedonia have ſhewn it. Nor is it diſtinguiſhed only by the greatneſs of its traffic, but is alſo very remarkable for the ſtately remains of its ancient grandeur; ſuch as triumphal arches (of which there is one here almoſt entire, erected in honour of the emperor Antoninus), churches of an extraordinary beauty, and now converted into Turkiſh moſques, particularly that of St. Demetrius, which conſiſts of one church built over another, and having in it above a thouſand pillars of jaſper, porphyry, &c. Without the city are great numbers of antique fragments with inſcriptions. Numbers of coins too are alſo frequently found here. It is the reſidence of a Turkiſh pacha, and likewiſe of a Catholic and Greek archbiſhop. In the year 1313, the city was ſold to the Venetians, who were diſpoſſeſſed of it about eight years afterwards by Amurath II. The former burn coal, and the latter wood. This town enjoys its own magiſtracy, together with other conſiderable rights and privileges granted to it by king George II. in the year 1732: 12 miles ESE. Hameln, and 19 WSW. Hildeſheim.

SALZ UFLEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Lippe, ſituated on the Salz. It owes its name to a rich ſalt ſpring: 11 miles N. Detmold, and 14 SW. Minden.

SALZA (Great), a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Magdeburg, having two ſalt ſprings belonging to it, and thirty-four pans. This town is noted as having been the place of reſidence of ſeveral noble families, of whom the corporation is compoſed, and who are the chief proprietors of the ſalt-works. By virtue of an agreement concluded with the Saxon revenue-office at Dreſden, relative to the delivery of a certain quantity of ſalt to the ſalt offices, a ſalt overſeer reſides here, whoſe buſineſs it is to ſee the ſalt put up in caſks, after which it is ſent by land-carriage to Froſe, on the Elbe, where it is ſhipped off for the ſalt-offices at Dreſden, Meiſſen, and other places in the electorate of Saxony: 12 miles S. SALZACH, a river of Germany, which riſes in the ſouth part of the archbiſhopric of Salzburg, on the borders of Tyrol, paſſes by Halein, Salzburg, Lauffen, Tittmanning, Burkhauſen, &c. and runs into the Inn, 5 miles NNE. from the laſt named town.

SALZBURG, a city of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and capital of the archbiſhopric of the ſame name, ſituated between three mountains, on the river Salza, which runs through the city, and divides it into two parts, communicating with the other by means of a bridge. It is well fortified, and that part of the city which lies to the right of the river, ſurrounded with eight baſtions, that on the left ſide with three. The mountain-caſtle, which ſtands in the former, is very ſtrong, not only on account of its lofty ſituation, but likewiſe of its works; and in it is the principal arſenal. This fortreſs is open only once a year, and the garriſon in it is never changed. It is alſo conſtantly furniſhed for a whole year with the neceſſary proviſions, namely, with grain, ſmoked beef, &c. The ſtreets in the city are narrow, and ill-paved, but in other reſpects it is well built. The archbiſhop's palace in it is large, ſtately, and commodious. Before it is a very beautiful fountain, and oppoſite to it ſtands another noble palace, called the Neuebau, in which the diet of the country is held, as alſo the meetings of all the ſeveral colleges; and here likewiſe is the archbiſhop's library. The biſhop's palace of Chiemſee, the chapter-houſe, and the apartments for the canons, are elegant buildings. The amphitheatre here, cut out of a rock, and which is 210 feet in length, ſtanding in the weſt part of the city, with the ſtables on the ſide of the Monchberg, are likewiſe deſerving particular notice. The cathedral of St. Rupert, conſecrated in 1628, is built of free-ſtone and marble; in it are five organs, with a number of embelliſhments, and a grand treaſury. The church of St. Peter is the oldeſt in the city, and near it ſtands a monaſtery of Benedictine monks, in which is a fine library. The univerſity church here, which was conſecrated in the year 1707, is alſo a noble building. The univerſity of Salzburg was firſt founded by archbiſhop Paris, in the year 1620. Salzburg is conveniently ſituated for trade. In 1510, the inhabitants attempted to make it an imperial free city, but were reduced to obedience by archbiſhop Leonard: 68 miles ESE. Munich, and 140 WSW. Vienna. Long. 30. 49. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 45. N.

SALZBURG, an archbiſhopric and principality of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, bounded on the north by Upper Bavaria, on the eaſt by Auſtria and Stiria, on the ſouth by Carinthia and Tyrol, and on the weſt by Upper Bavaria. Its greateſt extent from eaſt to weſt 100 miles, and 64 from north to ſouth. This country is defended on all ſides by mountains and narrow paſſes, or rather conſiſts entirely of mountains and vallies. No manner of grain is ſown here, whence it is ſupplied with all its corn from Bavaria; but every part of it produces hay of a peculiar goodneſs, and this proves a fund for breeds of excellent cattle in it. The horſes here in particular are eſteemed for their beauty, hardineſs, and vigour. At Hallein, which ſtands about two hours' diſtance from the city of Salzburg, are ſalt-works, belonging to the ſovereign, in which ſalt of all colours, yellow, red, blue, and white, is hewn out from along the ſubterraneous lanes, and then afterwards diſſolved in freſh water, which is conveyed into pits, of the brine of which is made the fineſt ſalt; but theſe works are carried on only in ſummer, a ſufficient quantity being made in that ſeaſon, not only for home conſumption, but likewiſe to anſwer all foreign demands. Indeed, Bavaria is the only country to which it is exported, and there, according to an ancient compact made betwixt the two princes, it is exchanged for corn. In this archbiſhopric are likewiſe very conſiderable mines of gold, ſilver, copper, lead, iron, and lapis calaminaris. A great deal of ſteel and braſs is alſo made here, and the plenty of theſe laſt metals remarkably appears in the aſtoniſhing numbers of ſwords, ſabres, bayonets, muſkets, cannon, and mortars, which are to be ſeen in the armories all over the country. In the archbiſhopric are ſix cities, and twenty-five market towns. The eſtates of the nobility here enjoying lower juriſdiction over the vaſſals, are ſtyled hofmarke. All peaſants here univerſally are allowed the uſe of arms, and being from their early years trained up to ſhooting at a mark, and military duty, on occaſion prove a very ſerviceable body. The nobility here were formerly very numerous, but the policy of the princes ſet too many ſprings at work for the oppreſſing and extirpating of them, ſo that not ſo much as one at preſent remains, and their eſtates are now in the hands of the church. Though in this archbiſhopric the Roman Catholic doctrines and worſhip alone are tolerated, yet at the time of the reformation Lutheraniſm was embraced by great numbers, whom archbiſhop Matthew Langins ſtrove to haraſs and extirpate by oppreſſions and violence. But archbiſhop John James proceeded more mildly, and in order to reconcile all tempers, obtained the pope's licenſe to adminiſter the ſacrament in both kinds, in which he was followed by his ſucceſſor. But the moſt violent flame of perſecution here blazed out under archbiſhop Leopold Antony Eleutherius, baron of Firmian, whoſe ardour for ſuppreſſing Lutheraniſm in his province was ſo great, that the oppreſſed party applied for redreſs to the ſtates of that religion in the diet, who prevailed ſo far that, in the year 1732, permiſſion was granted to the Lutheran Salzburghers quietly to withdraw, together with their effects; and, accordingly, above 30,000 perſons embraced this indulgence, diſperſing themſelves in the other Proteſtant countries of Germany, Pruſſia, and even in the Engliſh colonies in America. In all which ſeveral places they were received with that benevolence and encouragement which their magnanimity deſerved; and ever ſince that time theſe emigrations have ſtill continued. Arno, the ſixth of its biſhops, according to the poſitive aſſertion of the Salzburg hiſtorians, was, in the year 798, created archbiſhop and metropolitan over Noricum, Bavaria, a part of Rhætia, Bohemia, Moravia, and Pannonia. Since the extinction likewiſe of the archbiſhop of Magdeburg, the archbiſhops of Salzburg are become primates of Germany without any competition. The lands belonging to this archbiſhopric are of very great value: and came to it partly by donations from the dukes of Bavaria, the kings of the Franks, nobles, and private perſons, or by purchaſe. Its aſſeſſment in the matricula of the empire is equal to that of an elector, being 60 horſe, and 277 foot, or 1828 florins; to the chamber at Wetzlar he pays 608 rixdollars 69 kruitzers. His revenues are eſtimated by Keyſler at 800,000 rixdollars; but a perſon, whoſe knowledge and veracity are equally indiſputable, and who has long lived at Salzburg, affirms, in a manuſcript, that the incomes ariſing from all his lands, amount, totidem annis, to no leſs than betwixt three and four millions of guilders. The military force of this archbiſhopric conſiſts only of one regiment of foot, containing 1000 men. The 50 halberdeers and the 50 trabants, or horſe guards, here, being rather inſtituted for the ſplendor of the court than the military eſtabliſhment; indeed, a greater number of ſoldiers in this country would be both needleſs and inconvenient, it being by means of its hills and narrow paſſes well fortified againſt any invaſion; it has beſides very few places fit for the encampment of an army, and little or no grain, not to mention its brave and expert peaſantry, who would prove a ſtout defence to it.

SAMAR, or Samal, one of the Philippine Iſlands, 120 leagues in cumference, ſeparated by a narrow ſea from the ſouth-eaſt extremity the iſland of Luçon. In this iſland the ſoil is extremely fertile, eaſily tivated, and rewards the induſtry of the labourer with at leaſt forty Beſides other grain, the Indians ſow a conſiderable quantity of rice, which is wholly intended for the uſe of the parochial clergy, the ſettle of Manilla, and the governor of the province. The common food of natives conſiſts chiefly of a ſpecies of potatoe, yams, and a root named From the ſap of the cocoa, nipe, and cabonegro trees, they obtain the terials for an excellent ſpecies of brandy. The laſt of theſe owes its to the black colour of its fibres, which are manufactured by the nat into cables, and different kinds of cordage. The only inſtrument uſed the Indian, either for the purpoſe of war or induſtry, is a kind of cou de chaſſe, named cris, or campilan; an inſtrument which, after ſer him againſt the enemy, enables him to cut down the largeſt tree of wood, to be formed into a canoe, or ſplit into deals for more ordinary When the campilan has been ſo much worn as to be of little further vice to him, it is ſtill employed by his wife to grub up a light ſoil, which ſhe plants yams, potatoes, and other roots. Sugar canes, cabba garlic, onions, melons, the Chineſe oranges, lemons, vegetables, though in ſmall quantity, ſeveral other kinds of fruit, little known in rope, are cultivated in this iſland. It abounds in figs, of which Mr. gis reckoned no fewer than 13 or 14 different ſpecies, with a great var of perfumes. The natives are inſtructed to give particular attentio the culture of the cocoa-tree, which grows here to an uncommon Their woods produce the pumplemous, a ſpecies of orange, near inches in diameter, pepper, honey, and wax. Indeed, all theſe iſlands eminently diſtinguiſhed by the labours of the bee. The woods ſw with birds of almoſt every deſcription, particularly the common f which is, however, diſtinguiſhed from our's by the ſhortened proportion her body and legs. The colour of the hen is grey, with feathers ſpot like a partridge. There are three different ſpecies of turtle-dove. parroquet, cockatoo, and another pretty little ſpecies of the ſame ge no larger than a linnet, are ſurpriſingly common. There is alſo here a very ſmall bird of the diminutive ſize of a waſp, whoſe colo conſiſting in a ſhade of yellow, mixed with red and blue, are peculiarly vid and beautiful. Many kinds of monkies, one of which is remark large, roe-bucks, wild buffaloes, and other quadrupeds, abound in woods. The foot of a tall ſpecies of the figbanuan conſiſts in number folds of bark, which in a certain period of putrefaction are ſeparable w out art or difficulty. Theſe pierced together afford them a ſpecies of linen, harſh indeed, and diſagreeable to the ſkin, in its natural ſtate, which they have learned to render ſufficiently ſoft and pliable, by a p ration of lime. Beſides ſerving them as the materials of linen cloth, likewiſe uſeful to them for the purpoſes of cordage. The deportme the men is eaſy, open, and affable; the women are gay and li Among their productions of art, the Indian mat merits particular no which is a ſpecies of manufacture of ſuch fineneſs, that a piece of ſix could eaſily be put into a pocket. It is executed in various hand deſigns, and painted in very lively and elegant colours, which they the art of extracting from different trees. The hair of both ſexes markably fine, particularly that of the women, which they are accuſ to comb with great care, and to anoint, frequently, with the oil of the cocoa-nut, in order to ſtrengthen and render it of a deep black. Their noſes are ſhort and depreſſed, but the noſtrils are by no means dilated, like thoſe of the negro. The iron-tree, ebony, and dying wood, grow in every part of the iſland; and gold-duſt is found, in ſome quantity, in its more interior regions. The natives, eſpecially ſuch as reſide on the ſea coaſt, were formerly Mahometans; but the miſſionary Jeſuits converted them to the religion and allegiance of Spain. Lat. 12. 15. N.

SAMARCAND, a city of Aſia, and capital of a province in Great Bukharia, called Mawaralnahr, or Samarcand; ſuppoſed to be the Maracandus of the ancients. In the time of Alexander, it was 12 leagues in circumference, incloſed with a wall, and having 12 iron gates, a league diſtant from each other; and at every two leagues there was a fort, able to contain a great body of troops: the walls were likewiſe ſtrengthened with battlements and towers, and ſurrounded with a very deep ditch, through which an aqueduct was laid, conveyed thither by leaden pipes, from a little river called Sogd, and thence into the city, which ſtood on the ſouth ſide of it, ſo that every great ſtreet had a canal of water running through it, and every houſe a fountain as well as garden. In the year 1220, this country was invaded by Jenghis Khan, and the city taken and plundered. At preſent Samarcand is the ſeat of a Tartar prince, and carries on a great trade with Perſia, Hindooſtan, Chineſe Tartary, &c. Although it falls ſhort of being ſo ſplendid as in times paſt, yet it is ſtill very large, and well peopled. It is fortified with ſtrong bulwarks of earth: and ſome of the private houſes are of ſtone, dug out of quarries, which are near the town. The academy of ſciences in this city, is one of the moſt eminent among the Mahometans, who reſort thither to ſtudy from all the neighbouring countries. The ſilk-paper made here is ſaid to be the moſt beautiful in all Aſia, and therefore in great requeſt throughout the Eaſt. The ſoil produces pears, apples, raiſins and melons, of an exquiſite taſte; and in ſuch plenty, that the empire of the Great Mogul, and part of Perſia, are ſupplied from hence. The little river Sogd, which glides by the town, would be of great uſe to the place, by opening a communication with the neighbouring dominions, if the inhabitants had the art and induſtry to make it navigable. The province of Samarcand or Mawaralnahr, is ſituated to the eaſt of Bukharia, and extends to the borders of Kaſhgar, being about 500 miles in length from weſt to eaſt, and 450 from north to ſouth. This country was formerly full of flouriſhing cities, moſt of which are at preſent ruined or fallen to decay. The ſituation of the city is in Long. 3. 20. E. Greenwich. Lat. 39. 45. N.

SAMBALLAS, a name given to a great number of ſmall iſlands, near the coaſt of America, in the Spaniſh Main, of which three cluſters are called Croeſas, Mulatas, and Sagua. Theſe iſlands are ſcattered at very unequal diſtances, ſome only one, ſome two, ſome three, and ſome four miles from the ſhore, and from one another, exeending a very conſiderable diſtance along the northern ſhore of the Iſthmus of Darien. They ſeem to lie as it were parcelled out in cluſters; and between moſt of them are navigable channels, by which ſhips may paſs through, and range along the coaſt of the iſthmus, the ſea between them and it being navigable from one end to the other, and affording every where good anchoring in firm ſandy ground, with good landing, either on the iſlands or the main. In this long channel, a number of ſhips may always find ſhelter, be the wind which way it will; ſo that was the general rendezvous for the privateers on this coaſt. Moſt of theſe iſlands are low, flat, and ſandy, covered with a variety of trees, and abound with ſhell-fiſh of ſeveral kinds; ſome of them alſo afford ſprings of freſh-water, and convenient places for careening ſhips. The long channel between the Samballas and the Iſthmus, is from two to four miles in breadth, extending from Point Samballas to the Gulf of Darien, and the coaſt of the Iſthmus is full of ſandy bays, with many brooks of freſh water.

SAMOGITIA, a province of Poland, bounded on the north by Courland, on the eaſt by Lithuania, on the ſouth by Pruſſia, and on the weſt by Pruſſia and the Baltic; about 150 miles in length, and 90 in breadth. This country anciently belonged to Lithuania, and, together with that province, was governed either by one duke or ſovereign, or formed an oligarchy. In the year 1404, Samogitia was ceded to the knights of the Teutonic order; but about four years afterwards, it was taken from them. In 1411, the knights had a promiſe that this duchy ſhould again revert to the order after the death of king Uladiſlaus Jagello, and the next great duke Alexander. In 1413, the Samogitians embraced the Chriſtian religion; and a biſhop's ſee, and other ſmall eccleſiaſtical offices were erected in this duchy. The country is woody, and has many fertile ſpots. The meadows feed abundance of cattle, and the horſes are particularly excellent. In the woods are found bears and elks. Bees are abundant, and large quantities of wax and honey are collected. The inhabitants are robuſt and clowniſh, but reckoned honeſt and juſt in their dealings; they are ſaid to have a ſingular cuſtom, viz. no young woman is permitted to walk abroad in the night without a light in the hand, and two bells at the girdle. The province is ſubdivided into twenty-five diſtricts. The principal towns are Roſienne and Medniki.

SAMOS, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, 24 miles long, and 10 wide. Whilſt Greece was in its ſplendour, this iſland was populous and well cultivated. M. Tourneſort, when he viſited it, eſtimated the population at 12,000 men, all of the Greek church. It is the ſee of a Greek biſhop, united with Nicaria. Samos is ſeparated from the continent of Aſia by a narrow ſtrait, called the Little Boghas, and towards the weſt from the iſland of Nicaria, by a channel called the Great Boghas. The fertility of the iſland of Samos was matter of admiration with the ancients: Strabo was charmed with every individual thing in it, except the wine: Athenæus afterwards Æthlius, reports that the fig-trees, apple-trees, roſe-trees, and the vines too, of this iſland bore fruit twice a year. Pliny takes notice of the pomegranates of Samos, ſome of which had red ſeeds, others white. Here are abundance of wild-fowl, partridges, woodcocks, ſnipes, thruſhes, wood-pigeons, turtle-doves, wheat-ears, &c. There are no rabbits in Samos, but abundance of hares, wild-boars, goats, and ſome deer. They breed much cattle: they have fewer ſheep than goats. The French lade a bark with wool once a year. In Samos are ſome iron-mines. The emery-ſtone is not ſcarce in this iſland. Oker is common. All the mountains of this iſland are of white marble. The Samians live at their eaſe, and are not tyranniſed over by the Turks. The habit of the women is a veſt, after the Turkiſh manner, with a red coif, and a taſſel of yellow or white, which hangs down their back, as does their hair, which moſt commonly they part into a couple of treſſes, at the bottom whereof hangs a bunch of ſmall plates of block-tin, or ſilver of a coarſe alloy, for they have ſcarcely any other in this country. The land-tax here is about 12,000 crowns. A tenth is likewiſe paid out of all ſorts of grain and fruit, without excepting the very onions and gourds: they have abundance of melons, lentiles, French-beans, &c. The Muſcadine grapes are the beſt fruit of the iſland. They gather about 3000 barrels of Muſcadine at Samos, each barrel weighing 158 pounds four ounces, but the whole quantity of oil ſeldom exceeds 800 or 900 barrels, as much as the barrels of wine. They every year lade three barks with wheat for France. The poorer ſort, in making their bread, mix half wheat and half barley and white millet. Some mix only millet and barley, of both which they have great plenty in this iſland. The pine-trees in the north of the iſland, yield about 300 or 400 quintals of pitch, worth a crown a quintal, which pay four per cent. cuſtom. The ſilk of this iſland is very fine; it is worth four ſhillings a pound; this traffic, one year with another, may be rated at 20,000 or 25,000 crowns. Their honey and wax are admirable; fifty pounds weight of honey ſells for a crown, but their wax is worth five-pence a pound. They gather no leſs than 200 quintals of honey; but of wax ſcarce 100; the quintal weighs 140 pounds. The ſcammony of Samos is not ſo good as that of Aleppo. Samos contains ſeveral towns, or rather villages. The principal harbour is that of Vati, on the north ſide of the iſland. Long. 44. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 43. N.

SANCIAN, or Chang-tchuen-chan, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Ocean, near the coaſt of China, where the celebrated Francis Xavier lies buried. The iſland contains five villages, chiefly inhabited by fiſhermen: 40 miles SW. Macao.

SANCOINS, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Cher: 4½ leagues SW. Nevers, and 8½ SE. Bourges. Long. 20. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 50. N.

SANCRI, a town of Aſia, in Thibet: 20 leagues SE. Laſſa.

SANCY LE BAS, a town of France, in the department of the Mozelle, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Briey: 3 leagues W. Thionville, and 2 N. Briey.

SANDA, one of the Orkney Iſlands, about 12 miles in length, but ſeldom above a mile in breadth. The form is very irregular, and by reaſon of its ſeveral extended points and indentations, ſuppoſed to reſemble a lobſter. It is ſeparated from the iſland of Stronſay, on the ſouth, by a channel, about a league broad: from the iſland of Eday, on the weſt, by a channel, half a league broad; and on the north from North Ronaldſhay by a channel, varying in breadth from one league to two and a half. The ſoil is generally ſandy, with ſome quarries of free-ſtone at the weſt end. About 500 or 550 tons of kelp are made, one year with another, in this iſland. The number of ſouls in the iſland is about 1772. Long. 1. 45. E. Edinburgh. Lat. 59. 7. N.

SANDA, an iſland near the weſt coaſt of Scotland, ſeparated from the ſouthern extremity of the county of Argyle, by a ſtrait about a mile in breadth. Long. 2 24. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 55. 22. N.

SAND-ABAD, a town of Perſia, in the province of Irac: 7 leagues SSW. Amadan.

SANDAL, a lake of Ruſſia, in the government of Olonetz, about 24 miles long, and one broad: 48 miles N. Petrozavodſk.

SANDALA, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Jemarrow.

SANDARLIK, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in the province of Natolia: 4 miles S. Pergamo.

SANDAU, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leitmeritz: 6 miles WNW. Leypa.

SANDAU, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Magdeburg, on the Elbe: 48 miles NNE. Magdeburg.

SANDBACH, a town of England, in the county of Cheſter, ſituated on the Wheelock, near the grand canal, with a weekly market on Thurſday: 11 miles SE. Northwich, and 161 NW. London.

SANDBERG, a mountain of Sileſia, in the principality of Schweidnitz: 3¼ miles SSE. Waldenburg.

SANDE, a town of Portugal, in the province of Beira: 1 league N. Lamego.

SANDE, a town of Norway, in the province of Aggerhuus: 10 miles from Stromſoe.

SANDECZ, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Cracow, belonging to Auſtria: 42 miles SE. Cracow, and 75 SSW. Sandomirz.

SANDEFIOERD, a ſea-port town of Norway, in the province of Chriſtiania, with a good harbour, and convenient wharf: 6 miles S. Tonſberg.

SANDNES, a town of Norway, in the province of Chriſtianſand: 36 miles NE. Chriſtianſand.

SANDO, one of the ſmaller Japaneſe Iſlands, ſituated to the north of Niphon.

SANDOE, one of the Faroe Iſlands, in the North Sea, about 10 miles long, and 5 broad. On the ſouth ſide of the iſland are ſome rocks, and a dangerous whirlpool.

SANDOMIR, or Sendomirz, a town of Poland, and capital of a palatinate, ſituated on an eminence near the Viſtula, not far from its conflux with the San. Its delightful ſituation rendered it the favourite reſidence of Caſimir the Great, and other kings of Poland. This city is well fortified, both by nature and art; and in it are ſeveral colleges. The caſtle, which ſtands on a ſteep rock, was blown up by the Swedes, in 1656. A provincial court of juſtice is held here. The Sandomirian Staroſtey was the only one in Poland that could neither be mortgaged, nor let on a perpetual leaſe. In the year 1259, the Tartars and Ruſſians committed terrible ravages in this city, and put the inhabitants to the ſword. On the 22d of Auguſt, 1702, the nobility entered into a confederacy at Sandomir, and engaged by a ſolemn vow to defend their religion, their liberty, and their lawful king, Auguſtus II. It is now ſubject to Auſtria: 80 miles ENE. Cracow, and 250 S. Konigſberg.

SANDOWN BAY, a large bay of the Engliſh Channel, on the eaſt coaſt of the Iſle of Wight, between White Cliffe and Dunnoſe.

SANDOWN CASTLE, a fort of England, in the county of Kent, near Deal.

SANDSEE, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and biſhopric of Aichſtat: 16 miles N. Aichſtat, and 4 ENE. Spalt.

SANDSIO, a town of Sweden, in the province of Smaland: 24 miles NNW. Carlſcrona.

SANDSVOR, a town of Norway, in the province of Aggerhuus: 35 miles SW. Chriſtiania.

SANDSLAKE, a river of Norway, in the province of Chriſtianſand, which runs into the Aardelsfiord, 25 miles NNE. Stavanger.

SANDVLIET, or Santvliet, a town of Brabant, firſt begun as a fortreſs, in the year 1624, by the marquis of Spinola, to ſtop the incurſions of the Hollanders, and aſſiſt in the ſhutting in the beſieged; and finiſhed in the year 1628. Soon after its being completed, it was taken by the Dutch, who, however, were compelled to reſign it to the Spaniards the year following, 1629, when their troops were engaged in the ſiege of Bois-le-Duc. In the year 1705, the allies inveſted it, and ſix days after the trenches were opened, 700 men, which compoſed the garriſon, were made priſoners of war on the 30th of October. The fortifications were demoliſhed a little while after: 11 miles NNW. Antwerp, and 25 SW. Breda.

SANDUSKY, a river of North America, which runs into the Sanduſky Lake, 8 miles from the town of Sanduſky.

SANDUSKY, a lake of North America, on the ſouth-weſt of Lake Erie, with which it communicates, 35 miles in circumference.

SANDUSKY TOWN, a town of North America, ſituated on the ſouth-weſt coaſt of Lake Erie. Long. 82. 28. W. Greenwich. Lat. 41. 47. N.

SANDWICH, a town of England, in the county of Kent. It has ſtill a wall on the north and weſt ſides, and a rampart and a ditch on the others. It ſuffered much by the Danes, &c. whoſe king, Canute, here ſlit the noſes and cut off the hands of thoſe Engliſhmen, who were given as hoſtages to his father, Swenn. In 1217, it was burnt by the French, and again in 1457. It had two monaſteries, and other religious foundations. It was firſt incorporated by the name of barons, and in the reign of Edward III. by the ſtyle of mayor, jurats, and commonalty. It was reckoned one of the Cinque Ports, even in the reign of William the Conqueror. The members belonging to it are Fordwich, Deal, Walmer, Ramſgate, Reculver, Stonar, and Sar. The harbour has for many years been ſo choked up with ſands, and by a ſhip of great burden, of Paul IV. ſunk in the channel, that here is not depth of water for veſſels of a conſiderable ſize. The wool ſtaple was removed hither from Queenborough, in the reign of Richard II.; and ſome Walloons and Dutchmen, who fled hither in the reign of queen Elizabeth, from perſecution, ſet up the manufacture of cloth; but the chief trade of the town is in ſhipping and malting. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and has two markets weekly, Wedneſday and Saturday: 14 miles N. Dover, and 67 E. London.

SANDWICH, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts, in Barnſtable Bay. Long. 70. 24. W. Greenwich. Lat. 41. 17. N.

SANDWICH ISLAND, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, near the weſt coaſt of New Ireland. Long. 149. 15. E. Greenwich. Lat. 3. 5. S.

SANDWICH ISLANDS, a cluſter of iſlands in the Pacific Ocean, diſcovered by captain Cook and captain King, in the year 1778, and thus deſcribed by captain King, after viſiting them a ſecond time, in the year 1779: This group conſiſts of eleven iſlands, extending in latitude from 18. 54. to 22. 15. N. and in longitude from 199. 36. to 205. 06. E. They are called by the natives, 1. Owhyee. 2. Mowee. 3. Ranai, or Oranai. 4. Morotinnee, or Morokinnee. 5. Kahourowee, or Tahoorowa. 6. Morotoi, or Morokoi. 7. Woahoo, or Oahoo. 8. Atooi, Atowi, or Towi, and ſometimes Kowi. 9. Neheehow, or Oneeheow. 10. Oreehoua, or Reehoua; and 11. Tahoora, and are all inhabited, excepting Morotinnee and Tahoora. Beſides the iſlands above enumerated, we were told by the Indians, that there is another called Modoopapapa, or Kamodoopapapa, lying to the weſt-ſouth-weſt of Tahoora, which is low and ſandy, and viſited only for the purpoſe of catching turtle, and ſea fowl; and as I could never learn that they knew of any others, it is probable that none exiſt in their neighbourhood. They were named by captain Cook The Sandwich Iſlands, in honour of the earl of Sandwich, under whoſe adminiſtration he had enriched geography with ſo many ſplendid and important diſcoveries. The climate of the Sandwich Iſlands differs very little from that of the Weſt India Iſlands, which lie in the ſame latitude. Upon the whole, perhaps, it may be rather more temperate. The thermometer, on ſhore, in Karakakooa Bay, never roſe higher than 88, and that but one day; its mean height at noon was 83. In Wymoa Bay, its mean height at noon was 76, and when out at ſea 75. The mean height of the thermometer at noon, in Jamaica is about 86, at ſea 80. Whether they be ſubject to the ſame violent winds and hurricanes, we could not diſcover, as we were not there in any of the ſtormy months. However, as the natives gave us no poſitive teſtimony of the fact, and no traces of their effects were any where viſible, it is probable that, in this reſpect, they reſemble the Society and Friendly Iſlands, which are in a great meaſure free from theſe dreadful viſitations. During the four winter months that we remained amongſt theſe iſlands, there was more rain, eſpecially in the interior parts, than uſually falls during the dry ſeaſon in the iſlands of the Weſt Indies. We generally ſaw clouds collecting round the tops of the hills, and producing rain to leeward; but after they are ſeparated from the land by the wind, they diſperſe and are loſt, and others ſucceed in their place. This happened daily at Owhyee, the mountainous parts being generally enveloped in a cloud, ſucceſſive ſhowers falling in the inland country; with fine weather, and a clear ſky, at the ſea ſhore. The winds, in general, were from eaſt-ſouth-eaſt to north-eaſt; though they ſometimes varied a few points each way to the north and ſouth; but theſe were light, and of ſhort duration. In the harbour of Karakakooa, we had a conſtant land and ſea breeze, every day and night. The currents ſeemed very uncertain, ſometimes ſetting to windward; and at other times to leeward, without any regularity. They did not appear to be governed by the winds, nor any other cauſe that I can aſſign: they frequently ſet to windward againſt a freſh breeze. The tides are very regular, flowing and ebbing ſix hours each. The flood comes from the eaſtward; and it is high water, at the full and change of the moon, forty-five minutes paſt three, apparent time. Their greateſt riſe is two feet ſeven inches; and we always obſerved the water to be four inches higher when the moon was above the horizon than when it was below. The quadrupeds in theſe, as well as in all other iſlands that have been diſcovered in the South Sea, are confined to three ſorts: dogs, hogs, and rats. The number of dogs in theſe iſlands did not appear to be nearly equal, in proportion, to thoſe in Otaheite. But, on the other hand, they abound much more in hogs; and the breed is of a larger and weightier kind. The ſupply of proviſions, of this kind, which we got from them, was really aſtoniſhing: we were near four months either cruiſing in the harbour, or off Owhyee; during all this time, a large allowance of freſh pork was conſtantly ſerved to both crews; ſo that our conſumption was computed at about ſixty puncheons of five hundred weight each. Beſides this, and the incredible waſte which, in the midſt of ſuch plenty, was not to be guarde againſt, ſixty puncheons more were ſalted for ſea ſtore. The greateſt par of this ſupply was drawn from the iſland of Owhyee alone, and yet w could not perceive that it was at all drained, or even that the abundanc had any way decreaſed. The birds of theſe iſlands are beautiful and numerous, though not various. There are four which ſeem to belong to th trochili, or honey ſuckers, of Linnæus. There is a ſpecies of thruſh with a grey breaſt; and a ſmall bird of the fly-catcher kind, a rail, wit very ſhort wings, and no tail, which, on that account we named rallu ecaudatus. Ravens are found here, but they are very ſcarce; their colour is dark brown, inclining to black, and their notes differ from the European. Here are, alſo, owls; plovers of two ſorts, one very like th whiſtling plover of Europe; a large white pigeon; a bird with a lon tail, whoſe colour is black, the vent and feathers under the wing (which i much longer than is uſually ſeen in the generality of birds, except birds o paradiſe) are yellow; and the common water or darker hen. Their vegetable productions are nearly the ſame with the reſt of the South-Sea Iſlands. The bread-fruit-trees thrive here; not in ſuch abundance, but produc double the quantity they do on the rich plains of Otaheite. Their ſugar-canes are of a very unuſual ſize: one of them was brought to us, at Atooi measuring eleven inches and a quarter in circumference, and having fourteen feet eatable. At Oneeheow, they brought us ſeveral large roots, of brown colour, ſhaped like a yam, and from ſix to ten pounds in weight. The juice, which it yields in great abundance, was found to be an excellent ſubſtitute for ſugar. The inhabitants of the Sandwich Iſlands are undoubtedly of the ſame race with thoſe of New Zealand, the Society an Friendly Iſlands, Eaſter Iſland, and the Marqueſas; a race that poſſeſſes, without any intermixture, all the known lands between the latitudes of 4 ſouth and 20 north, and between the longitudes of 184 and 260 eaſt. Th natives of theſe iſlands are, in general, above the middle ſize, and we made; they walk very gracefully, run nimbly, and are capable of bearin great fatigue; though, upon the whole, the men are ſomewhat inferior, i point of ſtrength and activity, to the Friendly Iſlanders; and the wome leſs delicately limbed than thoſe of Otaheite. Their complexion is rathe darker than that of the Otaheiteans, and they are not altogether ſo handſome a people; however, many of both ſexes had fine open countenances and the women, in particular, had good eyes and teeth, and a ſweetne and ſenſibility of look which rendered them very engaging. Their hai is of a browniſh black, and neither uniformly ſtraight, like that of the Indians of America, nor uniformly curling, as amongſt the African Negroes but varying in this reſpect, like the hair of Europeans. One ſtriking peculiarity in the features of every part of this great nation, I do not remember to have ſeen any where mentioned; which is, that even in the handſomeſt faces, there is always a fulneſs of the noſtril, without any flatneſs o ſpreading of the noſe, that diſtinguiſhes them from Europeans. It is no improbable that this may be the effect of their uſual mode of ſalutation which is performed by preſſing the ends of their noſes together. The whol number of inhabitants cannot be leſs than 400,000. It was, here, in th iſland of Owhyee, that the celebrated captain Cook loſt his life, in a quarrel with the natives. Captain King, however, ſays, notwithſtanding th irreparable loſs we ſuffered from the ſudden reſentment and violence o theſe people, yet, in juſtice to their general conduct, it muſt be acknowledged, that they are of the moſt mild and affectionate diſpoſition; equally remote from the extreme levity and fickleneſs of the Otaheiteans, and th diſtant gravity and reſerve of the inhabitants of the Friendly Iſlands. The appear to live in the utmoſt harmony and friendſhip with one another. The women who had children were remarkable for their tender and conſtant attention to them; and the men would often lend their aſſiſtance i thoſe domeſtic offices, with a willingneſs that does credit to their feelings. It muſt, however, be obſerved, that they fall very ſhort of the other iſlanders in that beſt teſt of civilization, the reſpect to the women. Their natural capacity ſeems, in no reſpect, below the common ſtandard of mankind. Their improvements in agriculture, and the perfection of thei manufactures, are certainly adequate to the circumſtances of their ſituation, and the natural advantages they enjoy. The eager curioſity wit which they attended the armourer's forge, and the many expedients the had invented, even before we left the iſlands, for working the iron the had procured from us, into ſuch forms as were beſt adapted to thei purpoſes, were ſtrong proofs of docility and ingenuity. Though th cuſtom of eating the bodies of their enemies be not known, by poſitive evidence, to exiſt in any of the South-Sea Iſlands, except New Zealand, yet it is extremely probable that it was originally prevalent in them all. The ſacrificing human victims, which ſeems evidently to be a relic of thi horrid practice, ſtill obtains univerſally amongſt theſe iſlanders; and it i eaſy to conceive why the New Zealanders ſhould retain the repaſt, whic was probably the laſt act of theſe ſhocking rites, longer than the reſt o their tribe, who were ſituated in more mild and fruitful climates. As th inhabitants of the Sandwich Iſlands certainly bear a nearer reſemblance t thoſe of New Zealand, both in their perſons and diſpoſitions, than to any other people of this family, ſo it was ſtrongly ſuſpected, by Mr. Anderſon, ſon, that, like them, they ſtill continue to feaſt on human fleſh. The inhabitants of theſe iſlands differ from thoſe of the Friendly Iſles, in ſuffering, almoſt univerſally, their beards to grow. There were, indeed, a few, amongſt whom was the old king, that cut it off entirely, and others that wore it only on the upper lip. Both ſexes wear necklaces, made of ſtrings of ſmall variegated ſhells; and an ornament, in the form of the handle of a cup, about two inches long, and half an inch broad, made of wood, ſtone, or ivory, finely poliſhed, which is hung about the neck, by fine threads of twiſted hair, doubled, ſometimes a hundred fold. Inſtead of this ornament, ſome of them wear, on their breaſts, a ſmall human figure, made of bone, ſuſpended in the ſame manner. The fan, or fly-trap, is alſo an ornament uſed by both ſexes. The moſt ordinary kind are made of the fibres of the cocoa-nut, tied looſe, in bunches, to the top of a ſmooth, poliſhed, handle; the tail-feathers of the cock, and of the tropic bird, are alſo uſed, in the ſame manner: but the moſt valuable are thoſe which have the handle made of the arm or leg bones of an enemy, ſlain in battle, and which are preſerved with great care, and handed down from father to ſon, as trophies of ineſtimable value. The cuſtom of tattowing the body, they have, in common with the reſt of the natives of the South Sea Iſlands; but it is only at New Zealand, and the Sandwich Iſlands that they tattow the face. There is, alſo, this difference between the two laſt: that in the former, it is done in elegant ſpiral volutes; and in the latter, in ſtraight lines, croſſing each other at right angles. The hands and arms of the women are, alſo, very neatly marked; and they have a ſingular cuſtom amongſt them, the meaning of which we could never learn, that of tattowing the tip of the tongues of the females. The dreſs of the men generally conſiſts only of a piece of thick cloth, called the maro, ten or twelve inches broad, which they paſs between the legs, and tie round the waiſt. This is the common dreſs of all ranks of people. Their mats, ſome of which are beautifully manufactured, are of various ſizes, but moſtly about five feet long, and four broad. Theſe they throw over their ſhoulders, and bring forward before; but they are ſeldom uſed, except in time of war, for which purpoſe they ſeem better adapted than for ordinary uſe, being of a thick and cumberſome texture, and capable of breaking the blow of a ſtone, or any blunt weapon. Their feet are generally bare, except when they have occaſion to travel over the burnt ſtones, when they ſecure them with a ſort of ſandal, made of cords, twiſted from the fibres of the cocoa-nut. Such is the ordinary dreſs of theſe iſlanders; but they have another appropriated to their chiefs, and uſed on ceremonious occaſions, conſiſting of a feathered cloke and helmet, which, in point of beauty and magnificence, is, perhaps, nearly equal to that of any nation in the world. Theſe feathered dreſſes ſeemed to be exceedingly ſcarce, appropriated to perſons of the higheſt rank, and worn by the men only. The common dreſs of the women bears a cloſe reſemblance to that of the men. They wrap round the waiſt a piece of cloth, that reaches half way down the thigh; and ſometimes in the cold of the evening they appeared with looſe pieces of fine cloth, wrapped ſeveral times round the waiſt, and deſcending to the leg, ſo as to have exactly the appearance of a full, ſhort, petticoat. Their hair is cut ſhort behind, and turned up before, as is the faſhion of the Otaheitans and New Zealanders. The food of the lower claſs of people conſiſts, principally, of fiſh and vegetables; ſuch as yams, ſweet potatoes, tarrow, plantains, ſugar-canes, and bread. To theſe, the people of a higher rank add the fleſh of hogs and dogs, dreſſed in the ſame manner as at the Society Iſlands. They alſo eat fowls, of the ſame domeſtic kind with our's; but they are neither plentiful nor much eſteemed by them. The way of ſpending their time appears to be very ſimple, and to admit of little variety. They riſe with the ſun, and, after enjoying the cool of the evening, retire to reſt a few hours after ſun-ſet. The making of canoes and mats form the occupations of the erees; the women are employed in manufacturing cloth; and the towtows are principally engaged in the plantations, and fiſhing. Their idle hours are filled up with various amuſements. Their young men and women are fond of dancing, and, on more ſolemn occaſions, they have boxing and wreſtling matches. Their muſic is, alſo, of a ruder kind, having neither flutes, nor reeds, nor inſtruments of any other ſort, that we ſaw, except drums of various ſizes. But their ſongs, which they ſung in parts, and accompany with gentle motions of the arms, in the ſame manner as the Friendly Iſlanders, had a very pleaſing effect. It is very remarkable, that the people of theſe iſlands are great gamblers. They have a game very much like our draughts, but, if we may judge from the number of ſquares, it is much more intricate. Swimming is not only a neceſſary art, in which both their men and their women are more expert than any people we had hitherto ſeen, but a favourite diverſion among them. Their cloth is made of the ſame materials, and in the ſame manner as at the Friendly and Society iſlands. Their fiſhing-hooks are made of mother-of-pearl, bone, or wood, pointed and barbed with ſmall bones, or tortoiſe-ſhell. They are of various ſizes and forms; but the moſt common are about two or three inches long, and made in the ſhape of a ſmall fiſh, which ſerves as a bait, having a bunch of feathers tied to the head or tail. Thoſe with which they fiſh for ſharks are of a very large ſize, being, generally, ſix or eight inches long. Their inſtruments of war are ſpears, daggers, called pahooas, clubs, and ſlings. The people of theſe iſlands are manifeſtly divided into three claſſes: the firſt are the erees, or chiefs of each diſtrict; one of whom is ſuperior to the reſt, and is called, at Owhyee, eree-taboo, and eree-moee; the ſecond claſs are thoſe who appear to enjoy a right of property, without authority; the third are the towtows, or ſervants, who have neither rank nor property. It is pretty clear that the government is hereditary; which, alſo, makes it very probable, that the inferior titles and property itſelf deſcend in the ſame courſe. The religion of theſe people reſembles, in moſt of its principal features, that of the Society and Friendly Iſlands. Their morals, their whattas, their idols, their ſacrifices, and their ſacred ſongs, all of which they have in common with each other, are convincing proofs, that their religious notions are derived from the ſame ſource. Human ſacrifices are more frequent here, according to the account of the natives themſelves, than in any other iſlands we viſited; theſe horrid rites are not only had recourſe to upon the commencement of war, and preceding great battles, and other ſignal enterprizes, but the death of any conſiderable chief calls for a ſacrifice of one or more towtows, according to his rank. Long. 199. 20. to 201. 30. SANTA CRUZ, a ſea-port town of Africa, on the coaſt of Morocc in the province of Sus. A Portugueſe gentleman built a wooden houſe this coaſt for purpoſe of fiſhing, and found it a very profitable undertakin The Moors called this place El dar del Roomi, that is, "The Houſe the Roman. Don Emanuel, king of Portugal, perceiving the importan of this poſt for the preſervation of the conqueſts he had already mad and facilitating thoſe he meditated, bought the ground, about the begi ning of the 16th century, and built there a fortreſs, called Santa Cru which was taken from the Portugueſe in 1536. This town was long t centre of an extenſive commerce, and different European nations had ſe veral factories there till 1773, when the emperor obliged them to remo to Mogador, after demoliſhing the fortifications of Santa Cruz. T port of Santa Cruz is a large and very ſecure bay, capable of containi a great number of ſhips, and well defended from the wind on every ſid The communication between this place and the ſouthern provinces rende it more convenient for commerce than any other on the coaſt. Long. 50. SANTA CRUZ, one of the Caribbee Iſlands, in the Weſt Indies, about 8 leagues in length, and 3 in breadth. It enjoys a good air, but its water is not reckoned wholeſome till it has ſettled a while in earthen jars: the ſoil is black, eaſy to be cultivated, and very fertile, producing ſugar canes, oranges, citrons, and other fruits common to that climate. The iſland was diſcovered by Columbus; but the Spaniards having deſtroyed the natives, who made a ſtout reſiſtance, the iſland lay many years deſolate; it had afterwards ſeveral maſters, in a very ſhort ſpace of time, particularly the Engliſh and Dutch, who, after diſputing for ſome time the ſole poſſeſſion of it, agreed at laſt to divide it, and the latter built a church here; but in 1649, the Engliſh, growing too powerful for the Dutch, obliged them to quit the iſland, and were ſoon after driven out themſelves, by the Spaniards from Porto Rico. The Dutch inhabitants of St. Euſtatia and St. Martin, on hearing the Engliſh were driven out of the iſland, and believing that the Spaniards were returned to Porto Rico, ſent a colony to repoſſeſs it; but the Spaniards, who were ſtill there, attacked them ſuddenly, and took them all priſoners. Having thus, as they thought, ſecured the iſland, they prepared to return with their priſoners and booty to Porto Rico: but before they embarked, the French general Poincy, with a ſuperior force, landed on the iſland, upon which the Spaniards were glad to quit every thing they had taken, and leave the iſland in poſſeſſion of the French, who carried the Dutch priſoners back to St. Euſtatia; and having, in the year 1651, reimburſed the Dutch merchants at Fluſhing, the expences they had been at in ſettling the colony, he purchaſed not only this iſland, but alſo thoſe of St. Chriſtopher, St. Martin, and St. Bartholomew, in the name, and for the uſe, of his order of Malta, whereof he was grand maſter. In the year 1664, this iſland was purchaſed from the knights of Malta by the French Weſt India company; but in 1696, they ceded it to the king of Denmark. Long. 64. 35. W. Greenwich. Lat. 17. 45. SANTORIN, or Sant Erini, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, anciently called Thera, and Caliſte, or The Handſome Iſland. It is about 12 leagues in circumference, and in the form of a horſe-ſhoe. M. Tournefort ſays, nothing is more dry and barren than this ſoil; and yet, though it is all a mere pumice, the inhabitants, by labour and ingenuity, have made a perfect orchard of the moſt ungrateful ſpot of ground in the world. Santorin affords, indeed, little wheat, but a deal of barley, abundance of cotton, and wine in profuſion; this wine has the colour of Rheniſh, but it is potent and ſpirituous; it is exported to all parts of the Archipelago, and as far as Conſtantinople; the main trade of the iſland conſiſts in this liquor and their cotton manufactures. The women here are buſied in cultivating the vineyards, while their huſbands are abroad, ſelling their wines. The beſt vineyards are in a plain beyond Pyrgos, at the foot of the mountain of St. Stephen. Their way of culture is much like that of Provence. Their cotton comes in a ſhrub, like our gooſeberry-trees; they do not pluck them up every year, as is practiſed in the other iſlands; it is the ſame ſpecies with that which Bauhinus calls herb-cotton, and which he has diſtinguiſhed from the ſhrub-cotton. Fruit is ſcarce in this iſland, except figs. They fetch their oil from Candia, and wood from Raclia; the ſcarcity of the latter is the reaſon of their hardly ever eating new bread in Santorin: generally ſpeaking, they make barley-bread, and this but three or four times in a year; it is a black ſorry ſort of biſcuit. They kill beeves but at one time of the year; after they have cut them to pieces, and boned them, they ſet the fleſh to ſteep in vinegar, wherein ſalt has been diſſolved: this fleſh, expoſed to the ſun ſeven or eight months, grows as hard as wood; ſome eat it dry, others boil it. There are reckoned to be in Santorin 10,000 ſouls, five towns, and five villages. The inhabitants are all Greeks. When Conſtantinople was taken by the Franks and the Venetians, this iſland was joined to the duchy of Naxia: John Criſpus, the 12th duke, gave it, as a lordſhip, to his brother Nicholas: afterwards it was re-united to the duchy: in the reign of Soliman II. it was taken by the Turks, under the celebrated Barbaroſſa. Long. 43. 19. E. Ferro. Lat. 36. 28. N.

SANTOS, a town and bay of South America, in Brazil, and government of St. Paul; ſituated on a river, about three leagues from the ſea; defended by a rampart, on the ſide of the river on which it ſtands. The river is, at the town, about half a league in breadth, and five fathoms deep. It is alſo guarded by two caſtles, one on the ſouth ſide, and the other in the middle of the town; which contains about 250 inhabitants. SARDINIA, an iſland in the Mediterranean, about 140 miles in length, from north to ſouth, and 60 in its mean breadth, from eaſt to weſt. By the Greeks it was called Ichnuſa, Sandaliotis, and Sardo. It yields plenty of corn, oil, and wine; but by its many moraſſes, and the high mountains on the north ſide, obſtructing the wind from ſweeping through the whole iſland, the air is rendered very unwholeſome. Upon this account it was that the ancient Romans made it a place of baniſhment. The Phœnicians and Greeks firſt ſent colonies to this iſland, and erected ſeveral ſmall ſtates, as they had done in the ſouth of Italy and Sicily. The Carthaginians ſucceeded them, and had almoſt the dominion of the whole iſland. The Romans diſpoſſeſſed the Carthaginians. The Saracens invaded it in the 8th century, as they did Naples and Sicily. The republics of Genoa and Piſa recovered part of the iſland from them. Pope Boniface took upon him to transfer the iſland to the king of Aragon, who ſubdued the Genoeſe, Piſans, and the reſt of the inhabitants, and annexed it to his own dominions; and it remained united to the crown of Spain, till the allies made a conqueſt of it in 1708, and it was allotted to the emperor, at the peace of Utrecht, 1713. The Spaniards recovered it in the year 1717, but were obliged to abandon it two years after, when it was conferred on the duke of Savoy, in lieu of the kingdom of Sicily, in 1719. The kingdom is of more importance to the houſe of Savoy as a monarchy, than on account of the revenues; for, the charges of the army and civil officers being deducted, the remainder does not much exceed 200l. It is governed by a viceroy. Cagliari is the capital.

SARGANS, a town of Swiſſerland, and capital of a county of the ſame name, with a château, which is the reſidence of the bailly or landvogt. This county is about five leagues in extent each way, and though very mountainous, it breeds and fattens great numbers of cattle, while the vallies produce grain and fruit. In the mountains are found three ſpecies of ore, black, red, and aſh-coloured, which on fuſion, after a proper mixture, without any other proceſs or addition, yield a genuine ſteel. The inhabitants are partly Calviniſts and partly Papiſts. The former have their miniſters from the univerſity of Zurich; the latter, in eccleſiaſtical affairs, are under the biſhop of Coire. Sargans formed anciently a county of itſelf, under its own proper counts, from whom it came to the counts of Werdenberg, who, in 1396, mortgaged it to the houſe of Auſtria, from which it came in the ſame manner to the counts of Toggenberg, and on their failure, in 1436, reverted to the counts of Werdenberg. The people, however, entering into a perpetual community of rights, with the city of Zurich. The count, as a counterpoiſe to ſo diſpleaſing a ſtep, in 1437, formed a perpetual community of territorial rights with Schweitz and Glarus, and permitted the caſtles of Freudenberg and Neidberg, to be garriſoned with Auſtrians. This alarming both the inhabitants of this country, and the city of Zurich, the latter inſtantly marched 2000 men into the county, who laying ſiege to the two caſtles, took and demoliſhed them. On this, count Henry of Werdenberg and Sargans, mortgaged the whole county to the cantons of Schweiz and Glarus, for the ſum of 1800 florins, with a view of ſetting them at variance with Zurich. Accordingly, in 1439, they came to an open rupture, in which Auſtria bore a part. In 1450, a peace was concluded between them. And in 1485, George count of Werdenberg, ſold the county of Sargans to the ſeven old confederate cantons, which, in 1712, admitted Bern to a ſhare of the regency. SAUAD, a town of Arabia, in the province of Semen: 10 miles N. Damar.

SAVAGE ISLAND, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, about 11 leagues in circumference, diſcovered by captain Cook, in the year 1774. The name was given on account of the behaviour of the inhabitants, which was rude and inhoſpitable. Captain Cook ſays, the iſland is of a round form, and good height; and hath deep waters cloſe to its ſhores. All the ſea coaſt, and as far inland as we could ſee, is wholly covered with trees, ſhrubs, &c. among which were ſome cocoa-nut trees; but what the interior parts may produce, is unknown. To judge of the whole garment by the ſkirts, it cannot produce much: for ſo much as we ſaw of it, conſiſted wholly of coral rocks, all over-run with woods and buſhes. Not a bit of ſoil was to be ſeen; the rocks alone ſupplying the trees with humidity. The inhabitants were, probably, not numerous. They ſeemed to be ſtout well-made men, were naked, except round the waiſts, and ſome of them had their faces, breaſt, and thighs painted black. Long. 169. 37. W. Greenwich. Lat. 19. 1. S.

SAVANNA, a town of the United States of America, in Georgia. This town is well ſituated for trade, on the river of the ſame name; the navigation being very ſafe, and ſhips of 300 tons burden may lay cloſe to the town. The firſt houſe in this town was begun on the 9th of February, 1733. The river here forms a half-moon, with banks on the ſouth ſide, forty feet high, having on the top a flat, which ſailors call a bluff, at leaſt ſixty feet high from the river, and extending five or ſix miles into the country. In the centre of this half-moon the town is ſituated, and over againſt it is an iſland, conſiſting of very rich paſture-land. Long. 81. 12. W. Greenwich. Lat. 32. 4. N.—On the 15th of January, 1779, this town was taken by the Britiſh forces, under lieutenant-colonel Campbell.

SAVINDROOG, a town and fortreſs of Hindooſtan, in the Myſore country. This fortreſs is ſituated on the ſummit of a vaſt mountain or rock, which is ſuppoſed to riſe above half a mile in perpendicular height, from a table or baſe of eight or ten miles in circumference. This immenſe mountain is divided at its ſummit by a chaſm, which ſeparates it into two hills, which having each their peculiar defences, form two citadels, capable of being maintained independent of the lower works. The whole mountain is ſurrounded by a ſtrong wall on every ſide, and in every part which was conſidered as acceſſible, croſs walls and barriers are erected ſo as to give the whole an impregnable and ſtupendous appearance. On the 10th of December, 1791, colonel Stuart encamped within three miles of the north ſide of the rock, the quarter which the chief engineer conſidered as the weakeſt ; and on the morning of the 21ſt, at eleven o'clock, the aſſault was made, and the ſurprizing exertions of the Britiſh ſoldiery made them maſters of a fortreſs which had hitherto been conſidered as impregnable : 18 miles W. Savoy in its extent includes the duchy of Savoy, or Savoy Proper, the chy of Chablais, the duchy of Genevois, the lordſhip of Faucigny, county of Tarantaiſe, and the county of Maurienne. Savoy may be puted a nurſery of heroes, being ſequeſtered from all incentives to lu and ſoftneſs, by reaſon of the lofty barren mountains, and enormous r that over-run the greater part of it, and are known to produce only moſs and ſhrubs. Box-trees, indeed, grow in ſuch plenty, that be are made of them. The vallies between the mountains yield ſome g but are rather more laid out for paſture. The induſtry of the inhabit has made the beſt improvements in the mountains themſelves which ſoil could admit of. The wine, about the Lake of Geneva, Montme and St. Jeanne de Maurienne, is not contemptible ; and ſome parts moſt famous is Mount Senis, or Cenis ; the road from Savoy to Pied being cut over it. On the Laſneburgh ſide, the height is about three along a ſerpentine road, where the mules that carry the paſſengers and gage muſt be left to themſelves, without any apprehenſion of danger :

creatures being very cautious and ſure-footed. The higher mou chains of high mountains occaſion the roads in Savoy to be very bad, greeable and dangerous ; eſpecially as huge maſſes of ſnow, or fragm rocks roll frequently into them. Large coaches and carriages are ta pieces, and carried over the mountains by the mules. The chief rivers in this country are, the Rhône, the Arve, the Siers, the Iſere, and the Arc. Of lakes, the chief are thoſe of Annecy, in Genevois, and Bourget, in Savoy. The laſt has a fiſh of great delicacy, unknown in other countries, called lavarette, frequently weighing four or five pounds. The Savoyards, from the nature of their country, are generally ſo poor, that a traveller ſeldom meets any on the public road who do not recommend themſelves to his benevolence; and a farmer, with a yoke of oxen, two horſes, four cows, a few goats and ſheep, and a ſmall parcel of land, is reputed a man of ſubſtance. Their bread is of oats, but the more wealthy use ſome wheat. Milk, and good water is their drink. Their food cheeſe, butter, walnuts, garden-ſtuff, and ſometimes, though ſeldom, fleſh meat. They who live in the vallies fare ſomething better. However, they are cheerful, of healthy complexions, and remarkable for their fecundity. Among both ſexes, a great many are ſeen deformed; and, the women particularly have wens that reach from ear to ear, and theſe excreſcences are imputed to the water. One-third, at leaſt, of the males ſeek a ſubſiſtence in France, England, and other parts of Europe, in quality of ſhow-men, chimney-ſweepers, ſhoe-blackers, &c. but at times return home with their ſavings. Mount Cenis affords a comfortable ſubſiſtence to the inhabitants, moſt of them being chairmen and mule-drivers. Travellers having been exceſſively impoſed upon by them, the king lately laid a certain tax on all kinds of carriages paſſing over the mountain; and on both ſides is an officer to whom travellers muſt apply for redreſs in any impoſition. The nobility, both in Savoy and Piedmont, labour under great oppreſſion. Indeed, the king's ordinances are in ſome reſpects advantageous to them, by having eſtabliſhed, in all fiefs, the perpetual right of primogeniture. In allodial eſtates, no nobleman can make a feoffment of truſt beyond the fourth degree; but a commoner is diveſted of all ſuch power. He who takes poſſeſſion of all the eſtate by right of primogeniture, is obliged to give the younger brothers, and the heirs of their body, when leſs than four, not above the fourth part; but when more, only a third of the income of the fief; and, in virtue of a reaſonable proportion, all daughters are excluded from any claim to the fief, whilſt any of the male branch of their father are in being. In the year 1724, the king reaſſumed all the alienated demeſnes, whereby the dignity of the ancient nobility gradually declines, as alſo by the continual increaſe of the new: for whoever purchaſes an eſtate having the title of a marquiſate, barony, &c. is thereby ennobled, and ſtyled marquiſs, baron, &c. and ſuch eſtates may be purchaſed of the king, for five or eight thouſand livres. Every nobleman muſt prove from whence he derives his arms, elſe he is deprived of this right, or muſt be at the charge of purchaſing a new coat. An eſcutcheon, entirely new, coſts between 10,000 and 16,000 livres, according to the different circumſtances of the perſon. No money is to be placed at intereſt, or lent on mortgages, out of the country. There is a prohibition againſt entering into any foreign ſervice, or travelling abroad without a written licence from the king. None are to be ſeen with fire-arms out of their fief; and a perſon not poſſeſſed of a fief, even though an officer in the army, is not to keep any. Not to mention many other reſtrictions, the king has declared all fiefs to be his property, without regard to preſcription or poſſeſſion; and whoever ſhall undertake to maintain the contrary, muſt make proof of it in the patent of inveſtiture. A foreigner intending to ſettle among them muſt be naturalized, and take the oath of allegiance; but if afterwards he happens to be upwards of 3 years out of the country, he forfeits all his privileges. No foreigner who is not ſettled in the country and naturalized, is capable of being heir to a Savoyard or Piedmonteſe. No foreigner is alſo to procure for himſelf fiefs or other eſtates, within two miles of the frontiers, under penalty of forfeiting his purchaſe. In Savoy, every one ſpeaks French, and moſt of the names of the towns and villages are of that language; but, in cuſtoms and diſpoſition, the inhabitants have more of the German in them. They are all Roman Catholics. The high court of juſtice, or the parliament, as it is called, ſits in Chambery. The king being, on account of Savoy, a member of the ancient kingdom of Arles, and a vaſſal of the empire, has a ſeat and vote in the diet of the Germanic body. Savoy had formerly its own counts, among whom Amadeus I. who lived in the 12th century, bore the title of marggrave; in Italy, Amadeus V. was the founder of the line of the counts of Savoy. His ſon, Aymon, who lived in the 14th century, added to the houſe of Savoy the ſurvivorſhip of Montferrat, by his ſpouſe, Polantha. His grandſon, Amadeus VII. poſſeſſed himſelf of the county of Nice and Vintimiglia; and his ſon, Amadeus VIII. who purchaſed the county of Gebenne, was, by the emperor Segiſmund, in 1416, created duke of Savoy and prince of the empire, and inherited from his brother-in-law, Louis, the principality of Piedmont, and a claim to Achaia and Morea. His ſon, Louis, had, with his ſpouſe, Anna of Luſignan, a daughter of king Janus of Cyprus, a claim on this iſland. His grandſon, Charles I. by his eldeſt ſon, Amadeus IX. inherited the like claim; Charlotta, ſpouſe to Louis, his father's brother, who was king of Cyprus, having nominated him heir, and the kings of Cyprus having pretenſions on Jeruſalem, he alſo inherited this title. To Philip, the youngeſt brother of the ſaid Amadeus IX. ſucceeded his grandſon, Emanual Philibert, who brought Oneglia and Tenda to the ducal houſe. His ſon, Charles Emanuel, made himſelf maſter of Saluzzo; and Catharine, his ſpouſe, being daughter of Philip II. king of Spain, the ducal houſe afterwards laid claim to that town. He had two ſons, of whom the elder was Victor Amadeus I. whoſe grandſon, Victor Amadeus II. was firſt king of Sicily, and afterwards king of Sardinia. In the year 1792, this country was over-run and ſubdued by the French republicans: the people being, for the moſt part, ready to receive them as friends, rather than as enemies; and a decree of the national convention was paſſed to form it into a department of the republic, under the name of Mont Blanc. Chambery is the capital.

SAVU, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, about eight leagues in length. The ſea-coaſt, in general, is low; but in the middle of the iſland there are hills of a conſiderable height. Captain Cook ſays, "We were upon the coaſt at the latter end of the dry ſeaſon, when there had been no rain for ſeven months; and we were told, that when the dry ſeaſon continues ſo long, there is no running ſtream of freſh water upon the whole iſland, but only ſmall ſprings, which are at a conſiderable diſtance from the ſea-ſide, yet nothing can be imagined ſo beautiful as the proſpect of the country from the ſhip. The principal trees of the iſland are the fan-palm, the cocoa-nut, tamarind, limes, oranges, and mangoes; and other vegetable productions are maize, Guinea-corn, rice, millet, calevances, and water-melons. We ſaw alſo one ſugar-cane, and a few kinds of European garden-ſtuff; particularly celery, marjoram, fennel, and garlic. For the ſupply of luxury, it has betel, areca, tobacco, cotton, indigo, and a ſmall quantity of cinnamon, which ſeems to be planted here only for curioſity. There are, however, ſeveral kinds of fruit, beſides thoſe which have been already mentioned. The tame animals are buffaloes, ſheep, goats, hogs, fowls, pigeons, horſes, aſſes, dogs, and cats; and of all theſe there is great plenty. The ſheep are of the kind which in England are called Bengal ſheep, and differ from our's in many particulars. The fowls are chiefly of the game breed, and large, but the eggs are remarkably ſmall. Of the fiſh which the ſea produces here, we know but little: turtles are ſometimes found upon the coaſt, and are by theſe people, as well as all others, conſidered as a dainty. The people are rather under than over the middling ſize; the women eſpecially are remarkably ſhort, and ſquat-built; their complexion is a dark brown, and their hair univerſally black and lank. The men are, in general, well made, vigorous, and active, and have a greater variety in the make and diſpoſition of their features than uſual; the countenances of the women are, on the contrary, all alike. The men faſten their hair up to the top of their heads with a comb; the women tie it behind in a club, which is very far from becoming. Both ſexes eradicate the hair from under the arm, and the men do the ſame with their beards, for which purpoſe, the better ſort always carry a pair of ſilver pincers, hanging by a ſtring round their necks; ſome, however, ſuffer a very little hair to remain upon their upper lips, but this is always kept ſhort. The dreſs of both ſexes conſiſts of cotton cloth, which being dyed blue in the yarn, and not uniformly of the ſame ſhade, is in clouds or waves of that colour, and, even in our eye, had not an inelegant appearance. This cloth they manufacture themſelves, and two pieces, each about two yards long, and a yard and a half wide, make a dreſs. Almoſt all the men had their names traced upon their arms in indelible characters, of a black colour; and the women had a ſquare ornament of flouriſhed lines, impreſſed in the ſame manner, juſt under the bend of the elbow. The houſes of Savu are all built upon the ſame plan, and differ only in ſize, being large in proportion to the rank and riches of the proprietor. Some are 400 feet long, and ſome are not more than 20; they are all raiſed upon poſts, or piles, about four feet high. When the natives of this iſland were firſt formed into a civil ſociety, is not certainly known, but at preſent it is divided into five principalities, or nigrees: Laai, Seba, Regecua, Timo, and Maſſara, each of which is governed by its reſpective raja, or king. The religion of theſe people, according to Mr. Lange's information, is an abſurd kind of Paganiſm, every man chooſing his own god, and determining for himſelf how he ſhould be worſhipped, ſo that there are almoſt as many gods and modes of worſhip as there are people. In their morals, however, they are ſaid to be irreproachable, even upon the principles of Chriſtianity. This iſland was ſettled by the Portugueſe, almoſt as ſoon as they found their way into this part of the ocean, but they were in a ſhort time ſupplanted by the Dutch. The Dutch, however, did not take poſſeſſion of it, but only ſent ſloops to trade with the natives, probably for proviſions to ſupport the inhabitants of their Spice Iſlands. Their Eaſt India Company entered into a treaty with the rajas, by which the company ſtipulated to furniſh each of them with a certain quantity of ſilk, fine linen, cutlery-ware, arrack, and other articles, every year; and the rajas engaged that neither they nor their ſubjects ſhould trade with any perſon, except the company, without having firſt obtained their conſent, and that they would admit a reſident on behalf of the company, to reſide upon the iſland, and ſee that their part of the treaty was fulfilled: they alſo engaged to ſupply annually a certain quantity of rice, maize, and calevances. The maize and calevances are ſent to Timor in ſloops, which are kept there for that purpoſe, each of which is navigated by ten Indians; and the rice is fetched away annually by a ſhip, which brings the company's returns, and anchors alternately in each of the three bays. Theſe returns are delivered to the rajas, in the form of a preſent, and the caſk of arrack they and their principal people never ceaſe to drink, as long as a drop of it remains. The Dutch having printed verſions of the New Teſtament, a catechiſm, and ſeveral other tracts, in the language of this and the neighbouring iſlands, Dr. Solander, who was at the ſchoolmaſter's houſe, ſaw the books of his ſcholars, many of whom wrote a very fair hand. He boaſted that there were no leſs than 600 Chriſtians in the townſhip of Seba; but what the Dutch Chriſtianity of theſe Indians may be, it is not perhaps very eaſy to gueſs, for there is not a church, nor even a prieſt, in the whole iſland. Long. 122. 30. SAXONY (Electorate of). The electorate is compoſed of the d of Saxony, the greater part of the marggraviate of Meiſſen, a par the Vogtland, and the north part of Thuringia, Luſatia, and a part of county of Henneberg. The country abounds in grain, pulſe, legu and fruit; hops, flax, hemp, tobacco, anniſeed, woad, &c.; win made in Meiſſen. The foreſts are conſiderable, which yield timber pitch. Coals are found in ſeveral places, and the mines are of great im tance; in which are found ſilver, copper, tin, lead, iron, cinnabar, qu ſilver, antimony, biſmuth, arſenic, different kinds of precious ſtone diamonds, topazes, rubies, amethyſts, jaſpers, &c. with quarries of va ſorts of marble. The principal rivers are the Elbe, Elſter, Mulda, Saal. It is in general well cultivated and populous; it contains up of 200 towns, and near 5000 villages. Saxony was the nurſery of reformation, introduced by Luther, which is now the prevailing reli Ambition to be king of Poland, induced the elector to become Roman tholic, but he engaged himſelf and ſucceſſors not to introduce any al tions in the church, worſhip, ceremonies, univerſities, or ſchools. The and ſciences are flouriſhing in Saxony, and the manufactures are num of thread, linen, porcelaine, glaſs, cutlery, carpets, velvet, and mu Frederick, the warlike marggrave of Meiſſen, was the firſt elector, i year 1422, whoſe grandſons, Erneſt and Albert, divided the eſtate tween them; the eldeſt became elector, and was ſucceeded by his offſ till the year 1547, when John Frederick was put under the ban of the pire, and duke Maurice, a deſcendant of Albert, was named elector Charles V. Duke Maurice was ſucceeded by his brother, whoſe deſ ants have ſtill poſſeſſed the electorate. The electorate of Saxony, without including Luſatia, vided into ſeven circles and two biſhoprics: the circles are thoſe of er the electoral, Thuringia, Meiſſen, Leipzic, Erzgeberg, Vogtland, Neuſtadt; the biſhoprics are Merſeburg and Naumburg. The matri- aſſeſſment for the whole is 2647 florins for the Roman month, and the r each chamber-term is 1637 rix-dollars.

AXONY (Duchy of), or Electoral Circle. This duchy is ſurrounded e circles of Meiſſen, Leipzic, and Thuringia, the principality of An- the marquiſate of Brandenburg and Luſatia. It contains about 27 s and 400 villages. This ought not to be confounded with the an- duchy of Saxony, which extended from Denmark to the Rhine. preſent electoral circle belonged not to the old duchy of Saxony, but marggrave Albert the Bear, took this country from the Wends, and came his ſon Bernhard's property in the inheritance of Aſcania. This hard, therefore, obtaining the dignity of a Duke of Saxony, the name e duchy of Saxony became applied at length to the portion of it in country; and the electoral dignity being attached to the duchy, it obtained the title of the Electoral Circle. Wittenberg is the capital.

AXONY (Lower), a circle of Germany, bounded on the north by duchy of Sleſwick, and the Baltic, on the eaſt by the circle of Upper ony, on the ſouth by the circle of Upper Saxony and the Upper Rhine, on the weſt by the circle of Weſtphalia and the German Sea. The es of this circle are the duchies of Magdeburg and Bremen, the prin- lities of Luneburg or Zelle, Grubenhagen, Calenberg, Wolfenbuttel, erſtadt, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Guſtro, Holſtein- ckſtadt, Holſtein-Gottorf, Hildeſheim, Saxe-Lauenburg, the biſhopric Lubeck, the principalities of Schwerin, Ratzeburg, Blankenburg, and rau, with the cities of Lubeck, Goſslar, Muhlhauſen, Nordhauſen, burg and Bremen. The princes who convene the diets are the dukes Magdeburg and Bremen, who are alſo alternately inveſted with the di- ory from diet to diet, and the oldeſt ruling duke of Brunſwick is poſ- d of the condirectorium. The diets uſed generally to be held at nſwick or Luneburg, but ſince the year 1682, have been diſcontinued. military eſtabliſhment of the whole empire, in time of peace, being, decree of the empire, in 1681, ſettled at 40,000 men, the circle of er Saxony was aſſeſſed at 1322 horſemen, and 2737 foot, which is the contingent of the circle of Upper Saxony, with which it was put footing in the partition of the aid of 300,000 florins, granted to the erial cheſt in 1707, when the ſum payable by it was fixed at 31,271 ins 58 kruitzers and 5 pfennings. Several dukes of Brunſwick in this le, have held, at the ſame time, the poſt of commander-in-chief, and of lieutenant-general. With reſpect to religion this circle is wholly theran. At the peace of Weſtphalia, it was ſtipulated, that it ſhould ays have four aſſeſſors, beſides one other alternately with the circle of per Saxony. In 1654, therefore, it was agreed in the circle, that Mag- urg and Bremen ſhould each preſent one, the houſe of Brunſwick one, Mecklenburg and Holſtein one, and betwixt them, as often as it came he circle's turn, were to chooſe a fifth aſſeſſor; alſo that he ſhould be minated by Lubeck, Goſslar, Muhlhauſen, and Nordhauſen, but at ſent the circle in effect names only two, and the alternative nomination eed on betwixt it and Upper Saxony no longer takes place.

AXONY (Upper), a circle of Germany, bounded by the circles of the er Rhine, Franconia, Lower Saxony, the Baltic, Pruſſia, Sileſia, Lu- a, and Bohemia. The countr is for the moſt part level, great part of it ſandy and covered with heath ſome parts of it, however, produce corn and flax. The paſture-lands ar conſiderable, and ſome of them rich, and great advantage is made of acorn and beech-maſts collected in the woods. Both the lakes and rivers aboun in variety of fiſh. In the whole duchy are four towns, and about 32,00 inhabitants, who profeſs the Proteſtant religion, according to the doctrin of Luther; manufactures are but little known. The exports conſiſt chiefl of rye, butter, cheeſe, timber, and fiſh. This country was anciently part of Slavia-tranſalbina, and its inhabitants, who were a tribe of th Weſtern Slavi, or Wendi, as confining on the Elbe, were named Polabei Henry the Lion, duke of Saxony and Bavaria, ſubdued theſe Polaber and held their country as his abſolute property, inſomuch, that when un juſtly put under the ban of the empire, he could not be deprived of th acquiſition, as being no fief. The imperial inveſtiture of it, together wi its ſeat and vote among the princes of the empire, was firſt obtained b George I. king of England, as elector of Hanover, in 1716. In the ma triculus of the empire and circle, its contingent is eight horſe, and thirt foot, or 216 florins; and to the chamber at Wetzlar, it pays 243 rixdol lars 43½ kruitzers. SAXONY (Electorate of). The electorate is compoſed of the duch of Saxony, the greater part of the marggraviate of Meiſſen, a part the Vogtland, and the north part of Thuringia, Luſatia, and a part of th county of Henneberg. The country abounds in grain, pulſe, legume and fruit; hops, flax, hemp, tobacco, anniſeed, woad, &c.; wine made in Meiſſen. The foreſts are conſiderable, which yield timber an pitch. Coals are found in ſeveral places, and the mines are of great impo tance; in which are found ſilver, copper, tin, lead, iron, cinnabar, quick ſilver, antimony, biſmuth, arſenic, different kinds of precious ſtones, diamonds, topazes, rubies, amethyſts, jaſpers, &c. with quarries of vario ſorts of marble. The principal rivers are the Elbe, Elſter, Mulda, an Saal. It is in general well cultivated and populous; it contains upwar of 200 towns, and near 5000 villages. Saxony was the nurſery of th reformation, introduced by Luther, which is now the prevailing religio Ambition to be king of Poland, induced the elector to become Roman C tholic, but he engaged himſelf and ſucceſſors not to introduce any alter tions in the church, worſhip, ceremonies, univerſities, or ſchools. The ar and ſciences are flouriſhing in Saxony, and the manufactures are numero of thread, linen, porcelaine, glaſs, cutlery, carpets, velvet, and muſli Frederick, the warlike marggrave of Meiſſen, was the firſt elector, in t year 1422, whoſe grandſons, Erneſt and Albert, divided the eſtates b tween them; the eldeſt became elector, and was ſucceeded by his offſpri till the year 1547, when John Frederick was put under the ban of the e pire, and duke Maurice, a deſcendant of Albert, was named elector, Charles V. Duke Maurice was ſucceeded by his brother, whoſe deſcen ants have ſtill poſſeſſed the electorate. His grandſon, George I. added his poſſeſſions Upper and Lower Luſatia, and ſome other acquiſitio The elector Frederic Auguſtus, in the latter end of the ſeventeenth centu becoming king of Poland, deſtroyed the comfort of his own life, and rui his country. The electorate of Saxony, without including Luſatia, is vided into ſeven circles and two biſhoprics : the circles are thoſe of S ry, or the electoral, Thuringia, Meiſſen, Leipzic, Erzgeberg, Vogtland, and Neuſtadt; the biſhoprics are Merſeburg and Naumburg. The matricular aſſeſſment for the whole is 2647 florins for the Roman month, and the tax for each chamber-term is 1637 rix-dollars.

SAXONY (Duchy of), or Electoral Circle. This duchy is ſurrounded by the circles of Meiſſen, Leipzic, and Thuringia, the principality of Anhalt, the marquiſate of Brandenburg and Luſatia. It contains about 27 towns and 400 villages. This ought not to be confounded with the ancient duchy of Saxony, which extended from Denmark to the Rhine. The preſent electoral circle belonged not to the old duchy of Saxony, but the marggrave Albert the Bear, took this country from the Wends, and it became his ſon Bernhard's property in the inheritance of Aſcania. This Bernhard, therefore, obtaining the dignity of a Duke of Saxony, the name of the duchy of Saxony became applied at length to the portion of it in this country; and the electoral dignity being attached to the duchy, it has obtained the title of the Electoral Circle. Wittenberg is the capital.

SAXONY (Lower), a circle of Germany, bounded on the north by the duchy of Sleſwick, and the Baltic, on the eaſt by the circle of Upper Saxony, on the ſouth by the circle of Upper Saxony and the Upper Rhine, and on the weſt by the circle of Weſtphalia and the German Sea. The eſtates of this circle are the duchies of Magdeburg and Bremen, the principalities of Luneburg or Zelle, Grubenhagen, Calenberg, Wolfenbuttel, Halberſtadt, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Guſtro, Holſtein-Gluckſtadt, Holſtein-Gottorf, Hildeſheim, Saxe-Lauenburg, the biſhopric of Lubeck, the principalities of Schwerin, Ratzeburg, Blankenburg, and Ranzau, with the cities of Lubeck, Goſlar, Muhlhauſen, Nordhauſen, Hamburg and Bremen. The princes who convene the diets are the dukes of Magdeburg and Bremen, who are alſo alternately inveſted with the directory from diet to diet, and the oldeſt ruling duke of Brunſwick is poſſeſſed of the condirectorium. The diets uſed generally to be held at Brunſwick or Luneburg, but ſince the year 1682, have been diſcontinued. The military eſtabliſhment of the whole empire, in time of peace, being, by a decree of the empire, in 1681, ſettled at 40,000 men, the circle of Lower Saxony was aſſeſſed at 1322 horſemen, and 2737 foot, which is alſo the contingent of the circle of Upper Saxony, with which it was put on a footing in the partition of the aid of 300,000 florins, granted to the Imperial cheſt in 1707, when the ſum payable by it was fixed at 31,271 florins 58 kruitzers and 5 pfennings. Several dukes of Brunſwick in this circle, have held, at the ſame time, the poſt of commander-in-chief, and that of lieutenant-general. With reſpect to religion this circle is wholly Lutheran. At the peace of Weſtphalia, it was ſtipulated, that it ſhould always have four aſſeſſors, beſides one other alternately with the circle of Upper Saxony. In 1654, therefore, it was agreed in the circle, that Magdeburg and Bremen ſhould each preſent one, the houſe of Brunſwick one, and Mecklenburg and Holſtein one, and betwixt them, as often as it came to the circle's turn, were to chooſe a fifth aſſeſſor; alſo that he ſhould be nominated by Lubeck, Goſlar, Muhlhauſen, and Nordhauſen, but at preſent the circle in effect names only two, and the alternative nomination agreed on betwixt it and Upper Saxony no longer takes place.

SAXONY (Upper), a circle of Germany, bounded by the circles of the Upper Rhine, Franconia, Lower Saxony, the Baltic, Pruſſia, Sileſia, Luſatia, and Bohemia. It is compoſed of 22 ſtates, in the following order: the elector of Saxony, the elector of Brandenburg, Saxe-Weimar, Saxe-Eiſenach, Saxe-Coburg, Saxe-Gotha, Saxe-Altenburg, Saxe-Querfurt, the Hither and Farther Pomerania, Camin, Anhalt-Quedlinburg, Gernrode, Walkenried, Schwarzburg, Sonderſhauſen, Schwarzburg-Rudolſtadt, Mansfeld, Stolberg, Barby, the counts of Reuſſen, and the counts of Schonberg. In this circle the elector of Saxony was formerly the only ſummoning prince and director; but as the whole circle is Lutheran, except the electorate of Saxony, he is not ſo now. Eight aſſeſſors are deputed by this circle to the imperial chamber, of which the elector of Saxony names two, and the marquis of Brandenburg two. The other ſtates name the reſt. In the year 1682, the military ſtate of the whole empire being ſettled at an average, in times of peace, at 40,000 men, to the ſhare of the upper circle of Saxony fell 1322 horſe and 2707 foot; and at the partition of the 300,000 florins granted to the operation-cheſt of the empire, in 1707, to this circle were allotted 31,271 florins 28 kruitzers.

In the year 1052, the count of Nellenburg, to whom the country belonged, founded a Benedictine monaſtery, to which he ceded the lordſhip of the town. In the 13th century, Schafhauſen became an imperial town, and its adminiſtration took the form which at preſent exiſts. In the year 1501, it was admitted into the Helvetian confederacy, and ranks as the twelfth in the thirteen cantons. The reformation was publicly embraced, in the year 1529, and eſtabliſhed throughout the canton. The municipal government is an ariſtocracy, limited by the right which the people have of chooſing the members of the council from their own body. Schafhauſen communicates with the reſt of Swiſſerland, only by a bridge acroſs the Rhine. The Rhine is here exceedingly rapid, and ſeveral ſtone bridges had been deſtroyed, when, in the year 1754, a carpenter of Appenzel offered to throw a wooden bridge, of a ſingle arch, acroſs the river, which is near 400 feet wide. The magiſtrates, however, required that it ſhould conſiſt of two arches, and that he ſhould for that purpoſe employ the middle pier of the old bridge. Accordingly, the architect was obliged to obey; but, he has contrived to leave it a matter of doubt, whether the bridge is ſupported by the middle pier; and whether it would not have been equally as ſafe if formed ſolely of one arch. A man of the ſlighteſt weight feels it almoſt tremble under him; yet, waggons heavily laden paſs over without danger. This bridge was finiſhed in leſs than three years, and coſt about 8000l. ſterling. Schafhauſen is one of the handſomeſt towns of Swiſſerland, it contains 6 gates, 3 fauxbourgs, 4 churches, and a college called Collegium humanitatis, with 8 profeſſors. The arſenal is in a fortreſs, built on a hill, at the extremity of the town. Veſſels that go down the Rhine, pay a toll. The number of ſouls is eſtimated at 7000: 25 miles W. Conſtance, and 44 E. It contains 17 pariſhes, and 10 bailiwicks, in which are two towns, Schafhauſen and Neukirch. It produces a conſiderable quantity of corn, but not ſufficient for the inhabitants, who are ſupplied with the reſt from Swabia. The paſtures are good, and wine they export. The number of ſouls, without including the town of Schafhauſen, is eſtimated at 23,000: the religion is Calviniſm.

SCHIRAS, a city of Perſia, and capital of the province of Farſiſtan, one of the largeſt and moſt conſiderable cities in Perſia. It is ſituated between the mountains, in a plain between 7 and 8 leagues in length, and about four in breadth. The city, which is about two leagues round, is not ſurrounded with walls, for they have been ſuffered to fall to ruin; but the gates, which remain entire, are large, ſtrong, and covered with iron plates; of theſe there are four, opening to the four cardinal points. The great ſtreets are bordered with trees; theſe are their principal ornaments, for there are not many grand bazars, nor fine baths. There are ſeveral ſtreets full of ſhops, which croſs each other to the right and left. The coffee-houſes are ſpacious enough, conſiſting of ſcaffolds built over the running water, to give them the greater coolneſs. As to the moſques, there are nine more ſumptuous than the reſt, and, beſides them, about 300 more that ſerve for chapels. In the heart of the city is a large edifice, the front of which reſembles that of a moſque in its portals, and two fine towers; but the upper part is impaired. This ſtructure is a public college, where the ſciences are taught. However, moſt of the buildings of the city are in ruins, and the ſtreets ſo narrow and dirty, that they are hardly paſſable in rainy ſeaſons; and in ſeveral places paſſengers are obliged to bend their bodies, in order to walk under the arches before the houſes, eſpecially in the quarter inhabited by the Jews. The ſtreets are alſo made extremely offenſive by the many neceſſary-houſes in them, which render the air very diſagreeable. The jackals not only infeſt the burying-grounds, but often commit great diſorders in the city, and, in the night-time, make diſmal howlings, that reſemble a human voice. The public gardens, at Schiras, which are about twenty, are extremely delightful: the trees are the largeſt of the kind, perhaps, in the whole world; theſe are planted without order, and the ſoil enamelled with flowers, which are in the greateſt plenty, and of the brighteſt colours. In the king's garden, to the ſouth of Schiras, Sir John Chardin obſerved a tree, the trunk of which was eight yards round. The inhabitants, from the great age of this tree, conceive the higheſt veneration for it; they go to pray under its ſhade, and tie chaplets, amulets, and pieces of their cloaths to the boughs. The fertility of the country about Schiras is very ſurpriſing. It produces the fineſt horſes, and the beſt paſtures. The ſheep are ſo fat, that their tails weigh 18 or 20 pounds weight. The pomegranates are as large as the head of a new-born child; but the beſt fruit is the grape, of which there are three principal ſorts: one very ſmall, which is ſweet and delicious, and the ſeed ſo minute and tender, that it can ſcarcely be perceived; the great white grape; and a large red grape, the bunches of which weigh 12 or 13 pounds. Of this grape alone they make the excellent wine diſtinguiſhed by the name of the wine of Schiras, which, for its fine colour, and the richneſs of its taſte, is eſteemed the beſt, not only in Perſia, but throughout the eaſt. It, indeed, does not pleaſe at firſt, appearing rough; but when drank a few days is preferred to all others; and thoſe who are uſed to it can reliſh no other wine: 65 leagues S. Iſpahan, and 80 E. Baſſora.

The inhabitants are a mixture from the neighbouring countries, with a great number of vagabond Tartars, who chiefly ſubſiſt by robberies. The ſoil is extremely fertile, producing great quantities of rice, wheat, and barley. The inhabitants, indeed, make but little hay, which is only uſed for the convenience of travellers, as the cattle are kept abroad all the year round. The vines are planted all along the hedges, and faſtened to the trees. It has, alſo, vaſt quantities of wild fowl, eſpecially pheaſants; there are hares in abundance, with two kinds of foxes, one like thoſe of Europe, and the other have wool inſtead of hair, with white bellies, black ears, and tails that are not ſo large as thoſe of our foxes; theſe laſt run in herds, in the night time, about the villages, and make a doleful noiſe. The inhabitants uſe buffalos inſtead of horſes, and make them draw in the ſame manner; they feed them with fenugreek. This country was part of the ancient Albania: Scamachie is the capital.

SCHONECK, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in the Vogtland. The emperor, Charles IV. in the year 1370, conferred on this little town, at that time ſubject to him, ſome very extraordinary immunities, as, namely, equal privileges and rights with the Bohemian town of Ellnbogen; among which this is chiefly to be remarked, that it pays no exactions to its ſovereigns, but preſents them only, when they viſit it in perſon, once a year, in a new wooden bowl, with five pound weight of hellers. This immunity Schoneck enjoys to this day, and it was confirmed to it as well by the Bohemian king, Wenzel, as alſo, in 1424, by the landgrave and marggrave, William, and by all the ſucceeding electors of Saxony. But, when, in 1708, they moſt humbly preſented to their ſovereign and king, as he paſſed through their town for the firſt time, a new wooden bowl with hellers, there were found among the latter 6063 pieces which in value were hardly reckoned equal to ten rix-dollars. In 1680, this town was all burnt down excepting a few houſes: 7 miles E. Oelſnitz.

SCHONECK, a town of Pruſſian Pomerelia. It is ſuppoſed to have been built in the year 1180, and to have been deſtroyed by the Pruſſians about the year 1186. SCHONEN, or Skonen, or Scania, a province of Sweden, bounded on the north by Halland and Smaland, on the eaſt by Blekingen and the Baltic, on the ſouth by the Baltic, and on the weſt by the Sound, which ſeparates it from Denmark; about 65 miles from north to ſouth, and 48 from eaſt to weſt. It was formerly governed by kings of its own, and had its particular laws. This is the moſt level, pleaſant, and fertile ſpot in all Sweden; and produces plenty of rye, barley, oats, peas, buck-wheat, honey, cummin-ſeed; likewiſe pit-coal, chalk, tiles, and pot-aſhes. The inhabitants alſo carry on a conſiderable trade in oak-timber, mill-ſtones, cordage, fiſh of ſeveral kinds, fine horſes, ſheep, and horned cattle. All ſorts of animals are larger in Schonen than in the northern parts of Sweden; but are not ſo vigorous, and, accordingly, become more ſtrong and hardy when they are removed northwards. Alum, ſulphur, and amber, are alſo found. In that part of Schonen which lies near the Sound and the Baltic, not a wood is to be ſeen for ſeveral miles; but that part which borders on Blekingen, Smaland and Halland, is well wooded. In the former part, which lies near the Baltic, turf and ſtraw are generally burnt for fuel. This country, with regard to its many advantages, may be called the ſtore-houſe and granary of Sweden. No province in the kingdom is to be compared to it for fine ſeats and noblemen's eſtates; and it contains more well-built towns than any other province of Sweden. The number of inhabitants in Schonen are computed at upwards of 600,000 ſouls. It has ſeveral rivers and lakes, all well ſtored with fiſh. The principal towns are Malmo, Lund, Landſcron, Helſingborg, and Chriſtianſtadt.

SCHOONHOVEN, a town of Holland, ſituated on the north ſide of the river Leck; by ſome ſaid to take its name from its good gardens; others call it Schoonhaven, from the goodneſs of its harbour. It holds a fourth rank among the ſmall cities which have a voice in the ſtates of Holland. Its magiſtracy is compoſed of three burgomaſters and ſeven echevins, who cannot ſerve longer than three years. It is celebrated for the great quantity of ſalmon which they take. William, comte of Holland, and king of the Romans, at the requeſt of his uncle Otho, biſhop of Utrecht, made a dike, in the year 1240, from Schoonhoven to the village of Amerongen, in the province of Utrecht, to defend the country from inundations. In the year 1424, Jaqueline, comteſſe of Holland, beſieged it, and obliged the citizens to ſurrender; but the caſtle was a long time bravely defended by Albert Beyling, with fifty men; at laſt they were compelled to ſubmit, on a condition that all the lives ſhould be ſaved, except the commander, who was condemned to death. This brave man deſiring ſome reſpite, he was allowed the liberty of one month; after havi ſettled his domeſtic affairs, he returned at the time appointed, and ſubmitt to his ſentence, which he might have eaſily avoided, having given no oth ſecurity than his own word of honour: 10 miles NE. Dort, and 13 SW Utrecht.

The country is mountainous, i terſected with fertile vallies. The principal commerce is in cattle, the is healthy and pure; the men are brave, hardy, and warlike, and excee ingly jealous of their liberty, the total population is eſtimated at 21,0 ſouls, of which perhaps one-third belong to territories, purchaſed and a quired, ſubject to the canton. The whole country profeſſes the Rom Catholic religion, and in ſpiritual matters is ſubject to the biſhop of Co ſtance. The inhabitants derive their extraction from the Cimbrians, w being defeated by Marius, the Roman general, about 100 years before t Chriſtian æra, fled into Helvetia. But the emperor Albert, intending deprive them of their liberties, and to bring them under an abſolute ſu jection to the houſe of Auſtria, in 1308, they united with Uri and Unte walden, for the defence of their common rights. In 1314, ancient conte between this country and the abby of Einſidlen, breaking out into op hoſtilities, and in 1315, the latter having procured from the biſhop of C ceſtan, an act of excommunication, and from the imperial court at Ro weil, an edict againſt the Swiſſers as ſacrilegious, and rebels to the empe Frederick, the archbiſhop of Mentz abſolved them from the excommu cation, and the edict itſelf was alſo declared invalid by Louis IV. the an emperor. Frederick, however, ſtill perſiſting that as treaſurer to the ab of Einſidlen, he had a fair pretence to put his father's plan in executio inſtigated his brother Leopold, duke of Auſtria, to make war on the peo of Schweitz; but theſe, by the aſſiſtance of their allies, the inhabita of Uri and Unterwalden, gave him a total overthrow at Morgarten. Af this ſucceſs, the three countries entered into a perpetual defenſive allian The government is democratical, every male turned of ſixteen years having a vote in the Landeſgemeine, but the ordinary regency conſiſts ſixty counſellors, with a Landamman as preſident, that is to ſay, ten each of the ſix quarters into which the country is divided. When neceſſary, theſe may be augmented to three times the number. Out of this council the principal officers are elected.

SCHWERZ, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and territory of Leipſic: 1 mile N. Duben.

SCHWETZ, a town and caſtle of Pomerelia, on the weſt ſide of the Viſtula. The caſtle was built, in the year 1244, by duke Suantopoik, as a defence againſt the attacks of the Teutonic knights. After this, the town was gradually built; and, in 1340, it was fortified. In 1310, it fell under the dominion of the knights of the Teutonic order. In 1454, it was taken by the Poles; in the following year the Teutonic knights made themſelves maſters of it; and, in 1466, it was taken again by the Poles. In the year 1665, the Swedes took this place: and the year enſuing it was taken a third time by the Poles: 7 miles N. Culm.

SCHWIBUSIN, a town of Sileſia, and capital of a circle in the principality of Glogau: 40 miles NNW. Gros Glogau, and 30 E. Frankfort on the Oder.

SCHWIEBEDOWE, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Oels: 4 miles S. Militſch.

SCHWINAU, a river of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, which runs into the Ilmenau, near Ultzen, in the principality of Luneburg Zell.

SCHWINEMUNDE, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in the Iſle of Uſedom: 14 miles NNE. Uckermund, and 12 E. Uſedom.

SCHWOCHAT, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria, on a river of the ſame name: 6 miles SE. Vienna.

SCHWOCHAT, a river of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria, which runs into the Danube, 2 miles above Fiſcamunde.

SCHWYB, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Sennaar: 40 miles N. Sennaar.

SCIABONIS, a town of Perſian Armenia: 30 leagues ESE. Erivan.

SCIACCA, ſee Sacca.

SCIAMAT, a town of Perſia, in the province of Kerman: 6 leagues E. Sirgian.

SCIATI, or Skiati, a ſmall iſland in the Grecian Archipelago: 6 leagues N. Negroponte. Long. 41. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 39. 26. N.

SCIELAT, a town of Africa, in the country of Nubia: 10 miles S. Syene.

SCIGLIO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Calabria Ultra, ſituated on a rocky promontory, anciently called Scylla, and celebrated for ſhipwrecks: 10 miles NNE. Reggio.

SCILLY, a village of Ireland, in the county of Cork, near Kinſale. The inhabitants are the deſcendants of an Engliſh colony, who ſettled here after the defeat of the Spaniards, in the reign of Elizabeth. They have ſeveral fiſhing veſſels, and annually take great quantities of fiſh, which they cure for foreign markets and home conſumption. As they ſeldom marry out of the village, they are generally related to each other.

SCILLY ISLANDS, a group of iſlands, or ſhoals, in the Southern Pacific Ocean, extremely dangerous, and ſo named by captain Wallis, who fell in with them in the year 1767. Long. 155. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 16. 28. S.

SCILLY ISLANDS, a cluſter of iſlands at the entrance of the Engliſh Channel, ſituated due weſt from the Lizard Point, and ſeen in a clear day from the Land's End. Beheld at a diſtance, theſe iſlands appear like ſo many high banks in the water, as land uſually appears off at ſea; but the rocks about the iſlands, eſpecially thoſe to the weſtward, appear off at ſea like old caſtles and churches. St. Mary's is the largeſt of the Scilly Iſlands, containing as many houſes and inhabitants as all the reſt. Its greateſt length is two miles and a half, middlemoſt breadth almoſt one and a half, and may be reckoned betwixt nine and ten miles in circumference. The hills are rocky, riſing in ſome places to a great height, and abound in mineral ores. The valleys are fertile, and the fields, like thoſe of Cornwall, are incloſed with ſtone hedges. The higheſt land yields a proſpect of England, in a clear day, and ſhips going out and returning at the mouth of the channels. Here is, alſo, moraſs-ground, in two parts of this iſland, called the Upper and Lower Moors, which ſupply the cattle with water in dry ſeaſons; in the upper part of which is a pretty large and deep lake. This iſland is defended by a ſtrong garriſon, ſituated upon the weſt part of it, overlooking the town and iſthmus, and commanding the country that way, and to the ſea about the batteries, of which there are ſeveral ſtrong ones, mounted with ſixty-four pieces of cannon, ſome of them eighteen pounders. It alſo contains a company of ſoldiers, a maſter-gunner, and ſix other gunners; a ſtore-houſe, with arms for arming 300 iſlanders, who are obliged to aſſiſt the military forces at the approach of an enemy; a guard-houſe, barracks, bridge, and ſtrong gates; and upon the ſummit of a hill, above a regular aſcent, going from Hughtown, the capital, ſtands Star Caſtle, with ramparts and a ditch about it. About a mile ſouth-weſt of the ſouth part of St. Mary's Garriſon, lies St. Agnes' Iſland, otherwiſe called the Light-Houſe Iſland, upon which ſtands a very high and ſtrong light-houſe, ſeen in the night at a great diſtance, by which ſhips going out of, or coming into the two channels, avoid falling in with the rocks, lying thicker about this than any other of the Scilly Iſlands. It is alſo of uſe to all coaſting-veſſels, croſſing the channels. About 3½ miles northerly of the moſt northern part of St. Agnes' Iſland, or two miles northerly from St. Mary's Key, lies the iſland of Treſco, the capital town of which is called the Dolphin (probably corrupted from Godolphin) conſiſting of a church, and about half a ſcore ſtone-built houſes. About two miles from the northernmoſt part of St. Mary's, or one from the eaſternmoſt part of Treſco, lies the iſland of St. Martin; upon the extremity of which, at the outermoſt part, ſtands a day-mark, next the coming-in of Crow-ſound, appearing, at a diſtance, as conſpicuous by day as the light-houſe upon St. Agnes', but is not altogether ſo high and large. It is built with rock-ſtone, round next the bottom, and tapering upwards. This ſerves to direct veſſels croſſing the channels, or coming into Scilly. About half a mile from the weſt ſide of Treſco Iſland, to the weſtward of the landing-place, lies the iſland of Bryer, which is inhabited by ſeveral families. The number of people upon the iſland of St. Mary is about 700, including men, women, and children; and about as many in the iſlands of Treſco, St. Martin, Bryer, St. Agnes, and Sampſon; in the laſt and ſmalleſt of which inhabited iſland, lives but one family, which goes to the places of worſhip in the other iſlands; here being no opportunity of public devotion, nor of communication, but by means of a boat. The air of theſe iſlands is mild and pure; their winters are ſeldom ſubject to froſt and ſnow. When the former happens it laſts not long, and the latter never lies upon the ground. The heat of their ſummer is much abated by ſea-breezes; they are, indeed, frequently incommoded by ſea fogs, but theſe are not unwholeſome. Agues are rare, and fevers more ſo. The moſt fatal diſtemper is the ſmall-pox; yet thoſe who live temperately, ſurvive commonly to a great age, and are remarkably free from diſeaſes. The ſoil is very good, and produces grain of all ſorts, except wheat, of which they had anciently great quantities. They ſtill grow a little, but the bread made of it is unpleaſant. For this reaſon they chiefly eat what is made of barley; and of this they have ſuch abundance, that, though they uſe it both for bread and beer, they have more than ſuffices for their own conſumption. Potatoes is a new improvement. They have all ſorts of roots, and pulſe and ſallads grow well. Dwarf fruit-trees, gooſeberries, currants, raſberries, and every thing of that kind, under proper ſhelter, thrive exceedingly, but they have no tall trees. The ranuncula, anemone, and moſt kind of flowers, are ſucceſsfully cultivated in their gardens. They have wild fowl of all ſorts, from the ſwan to the ſnipe; and a particular kind, called the hedge-chicken, which is not inferior to the ortolan. Tame fowl, puffins, and rabbits in great number. Their black cattle are generally ſmall, but very well taſted, though they feed upon ore-wood; their horſes are little, but ſtrong and lively. Theſe iſlands lie ſo in the middle, between the two vaſt openings of the north and ſouth narrow ſeas, or, as the ſailors call them, the Briſtol Channel and the Channel (ſo called by way of eminence) that it cannot, or, perhaps, never will be avoided; but that ſeveral ſhips, in the dark of the night, and in ſtreſs of weather, may, by being out in their reckonings, or by other unavoidable accidents, miſtake; and if they do, they are ſure, as the ſailors call it, to run bump aſhore upon Scilly, where they find no quarter among the breakers, but are beaten to pieces, without any poſſibility of eſcape. One can hardly mention the rocks of Scilly, without letting fall a tear to the memory of Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, and all the gallant ſpirits with him, who, in the admiral's ſhip, with three other men of war, and all their men, running upon theſe rocks, right before the wind, in a dark night, were loſt, on his return from a fruitleſs expedition againſt Toulon. Sir Cloudeſly Shovel was loſt October 22, 1707. It was thick foggy weather, when the whole fleet, in company, coming (as they thought) near the land, agreed to lie to in the afternoon; but Sir Cloudeſley, in the Aſſociation, ordering ſail to be made, firſt ſtruck, in the night, and ſunk immediately: ſeveral perſons of diſtinction being on board at that time were loſt, (particularly Lady Shovel's two ſons, by Sir John Narborough) with about 800 men. The Eagle, captain Hancock, commander, underwent the ſame fate. The Romney, and Fire-brand alſo ſtruck, and were loſt; but the two captains and 25 of their men were ſaved. The other men of war eſcaped, by having timely notice. Long. 6. 39. to 6. 54. W. Greenwich. Lat. 49. 54. to 50. 2. N.

SCIO, or Chios, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, 30 miles long, and from 10 to 18 wide. This iſland is mountainous and bare of wood; yet, in ſome places, there are abundance of orange, citron, olive, mulberry, myrtle, and pomegranate-trees, without reckoning maſtic and turpentine. The country does not want for corn; but, it not yielding a ſufficient quantity, they fetch it, from time to time, from the continent; and for this reaſon the Chriſtian princes could not long keep this iſland, if they were at war with the Turks. At Scio, they plant their vines on the hills, and cut the grapes in Auguſt, and let them lie in the ſun to dry for ſeven or eight days; after which they preſs them, and let them ſtand in tubs to work, the cellar being all the while cloſe ſhut up. When they would make the beſt wine, they mix among the black grapes a ſort of white one, which ſmells like a peach-kernel; but, in making nectar, ſo called even to this day, they make uſe of another kind of grape, ſomewhat ſtyptic, which makes it difficult to ſwallow. There is not much oil got in Scio; the beſt crop yields but about 200 hogſheads. The French get a good deal of honey and wax off this iſland; but the moſt conſiderable merchandize is their ſilk; of this they make, one year with another, 30,000 pounds. Almoſt all this ſilk is uſed in the iſland, in the manufactures of velvet, damaſk, and other ſtuffs, deſigned for Aſia, Egypt, and Barbary; ſometimes they mix gold and ſilver in theſe ſtuffs, according to the fancy of the workers or merchants. Every pound of ſilk pays at the cuſtom-houſe four timins, that is, twenty-pence; in 1700, it ſold for thirty-five timins per pound; the buyer pays the cuſtom. The Turks and French pay three per cent. for all the commodities of the iſland: the Greeks, the Jews, and the Armenians pay five per cent. Theſe duties are farmed at 25,000 crowns, payable to the chief treaſurer of Conſtantinople. The other wares of the iſland are wool, cheeſe, figs, and maſtic. The traffic of wool and cheeſe is not ſo conſiderable as that of figs: beſides what are ſpent in making brandy, they ſend away great quantities of them to the neighbouring iſlands. All the lentiſk-trees belong to the grand ſignior; and they cannot be ſold but under condition that the purchaſer pay the ſame quantity of maſtic to the emperor: generally, the land is ſold and the trees reſerved. There ſometimes comes an aga from Conſtantinople, to receive the maſtic due to the grand Signior; or elſe they appoint the cuſtom-houſe officers of Scio to receive it, who go to three or four of the chief towns, and give notice to the inhabitants of the reſt to bring in their contingent: all theſe villages together owe 280 cheſts of maſtic, weighing 32,500lbs. If any perſon is caught carrying maſtics to ſuch towns as do not plant the tree, they are ſentenced to the gallies, and ſtripped of all they are worth. The planters of the lentiſk pay but half the capitation, and wear the white ſaſh round their turbans as well as the Turks. The turpentine of Scio has been long in great eſtimation, and is obtained by cutting croſs-ways, with a hatchet, the trunks of the biggeſt turpentine-trees, from the end of July to October; the turpentine runs down on flat ſtones, placed under the trees. is ſaid to contain fifty towns and villages. In time of peace, the cadi verns the whole country: in war-time a pacha is ſent to command troops. There is no waivode here, only an aga janizary, who has un him about 150 janizaries in time of peace, and 300 or 400 in war-time. all Scio there are not above 10,000 ſouls of the Turks, 3000 Latins, it is reckoned there are 100,000 Greeks. Long. 43. 42. SCLAFANI, a town of Sicily, in the vally of Mazara: 30 miles S Palermo.

SCLAVONIA, a country of Europe, ſituated between the rivers Dr and Danube on the north, and Save on the ſouth; it is bounded on the no by Hungary, on the eaſt by the bannat of Temeſvar and Servia, on ſouth by Servia and Boſnia, and on the weſt by Stiria and Croatia; ab 150 miles in length, and from 25 to 45 in breadth. It is a fine, lev fruitful country, where cultivated; but having been, for many years frontier province againſt Turkey, and ſubject to the ravages of the Chr tian, as well as the Turkiſh armies, it has produced but little corn wine. The Raſcians inhabit the eaſtern diviſion of the country; and natives, in general, are of good ſtature, a brave hardy race, ſoldiers fr their cradles, their country having been long the ſeat of war. The anci Sclavonia contained many large countries; ſome have extended it from Adriatic to the Euxine Sea. It is ſaid to have taken its name from Sclavi, a Scythian nation, which ſubdued Greece as well as this country, the reign of the emperor Juſtinian. The Venetians made a conqueſt Sclavonia, and compelled the natives to ſubmit to the vileſt drudgerie inſomuch that ſome derive the word ſlave from this people, thus oppre and abuſed by their conquerors. The Hungarians and Venetians poſſe this country alternately. The king of Hungary was ſovereign of Sclav nia, when Solyman the Magnificent invaded and reduced it, in the y 1540, and the Turks remained poſſeſſed of it till the year 1687; ſoon af which they loſt this, and all the territories which the Auſtrians poſſ north of the Save and Danube.

SCOTHOLM, one of the ſmaller Shetland Iſlands.

SCOTLAND, a country of Europe, which, united with England and Wales, forms what is known in modern hiſtory, under the name of Great Britain : and as a mark of diſtinction, frequently called North Britain. This country is on all ſides bounded by the ſea, except towards the ſouth-eaſt, where it is joined to England. The length, from north to ſouth, is about 270 miles : the breadth is various, in ſome parts 150 miles, in others only 30 : the coaſts are ſo greatly interſected by innumerable lochs and bays, that it is ſaid no part of Scotland is more than forty miles from the ſea. Taking the country in three diviſions of north, middle, and ſouth, we ſhall obſerve the firſt almoſt cut off from the other by a chain of lakes, which extend acroſs from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt. The appearance of this part of the country is in general an aſſemblage of vaſt and dreary mountains, with ſome fertile vallies intervening, chiefly towards the north and eaſt coaſts. The middle diviſion is alſo very mountainous, the ranges of hills croſſing in various directions ; but even between theſe are ſome vallies celebrated for their fertility ; but the fertility of both parts conſiſt in meadow and paſture, rather than in arable land, which in theſe mountainous diſtricts bears but a ſmall proportion to the whole, and is chiefly confined to the eaſtern coaſt. The ſouthern diviſion of Scotland contains a much greater proportion of land in cultivation, and produces the varieties of corn generally found in England. The rivers of Scotland are in general remarkable for their rapidity, and abundance of excellent fiſh ; the principal are the Spey, the Tay, the Clyde, the Forth, the Tweed, the Dee, the Don, the Eſk, the Annan, the Nith, &c. The lochs, or lakes, are numerous, and ſome of them extenſive. On the weſt and north coaſts are innumerable iſlands ; the three principal ranges, or cluſters of which, are called Weſtern Iſlands, Shetland Iſlands, and Orkney Iſlands. The climate of Scotland is various in different places. The northern extremity, which is on the ſame parallel of latitude with ſome parts of Norway, is very cold ; but the froſts are much leſs intenſe here than in any part of the continent equally far north ; an advantage ariſing from an inſular ſituation. The whole weſt coaſt is ſubjected to frequent ſummer rains, and ſudden changes in the atmoſphere, equally unfavourable to the ripening and gathering in of the products of the earth. The climate in many places on the eaſtern coaſt, and in the whole ſouth diviſion, is not inferior to that of the northern part of England. The air in Scotland is in general healthy. The produce of the ſoil in the northern parts of Scotland, and its iſles, is not conſiderable ; but lime-ſtone, ſhell-ſand, and marl, thoſe rich manures, are found in great plenty in different places ; even the rocky ſhores produce abundance of kelp, an article of conſiderable importance in ſeveral manufactures. The fiſheries in the ſurrounding ſeas have long been an object of national importance. When increaſing commerce ſhall enable the inhabitants to form roads, erect towns, and open canals in thoſe remote parts of the country, theſe fiſheries may become a real ſource of wealth to the nation. The products of Scotland, in general, are, however, multifarious and valuable. It feeds vaſt herds of cattle, and its hills are covered with ſheep. It produces much grain and flax. Its woods of oak and fir might furniſh maſt and timber for the uſe of the Britiſh navy. Its mines are rich in coal, in lead, and in iron. Freeſtone, limeſtone, and ſlate, are found in abundance. Neither Greece nor Italy can boaſt a greater ſtore of beautiful marble ; fine rock cryſtals, pearls, and variegated pebbles, are not uncommon. Its rivers and lakes are richly ſtored with ſalmon and trout, and a variety of other fiſhes. The Scottiſh mountains, in former times, were infeſted by the wolf and bear, but happily thoſe ferocious animals have long been extirpated. The wild ox was alſo an inhabitant of the Caledonian foreſt. Herds of wild roes, to this day, range at large in the northern mountains ; and the ſtag is often ſeen in the woods. There, too, the beautiful bird called capercailzie, or cock of the wood, is ſometimes found. The ſummits are the haunt of the ptarmigan, the eagle, the falcon, and the Alpine hare. Black game and grouſe ſwarm among the heaths : among the wild animals which Scotland poſſeſſes in common with England, are the fox, the badger, the otter, the hedgehog, the hare and rabbit, the weazel, the mole, and other ſmall quadrupeds ; the partridge, the quail, the ſnipe, the plover, and many other birds. The cattle and ſheep are ſmall, but much valued for the delicacy of their fleſh ; and the fleece of the Scottiſh ſheep often equals the fineſt Spaniſh wool. Though the cattle in the high grounds be diminutive, yet in many parts of the counrry, the horſes and cows are not inferior in ſize and beauty to thoſe of the Engliſh breed. The trade and population of great towns have conſiderably increaſed of late. Some diſtricts, however, on the weſtern ſhores eſpecially, are almoſt depopulated. Whole colonies have, at once, forſaken their native ſhores ; and the country is annually drained of its inhabitants, by the emigration of individuals, tempted by the view of riches. It has thence been conjectured, that the number of inhabitants in Scotland has decreaſed conſiderably within this century. However that may be, the improvements, the induſtry, and the riches lately introduced into Scotland, form a ſtriking contraſt with the poverty of former times. This favourable change may be conſidered as the effect of thoſe liberal principles, and enlightened views, for which many ſpirited friends of Scotland are at preſent ſo eminently diſtinguiſhed. Scotland is divided into thirty-three ſhires or counties, the names of which are Aberdeen, Angus or Forfar, Argyle, Ayr, Banff, Berwick, Bute, Caithneſs, Clackmannan, Cromarty, Dumbarton, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Fife, Haddington, Inverneſs, Kincardine, Kinroſs, Kircudbright, Lanerk, Linlithgow, Murray or Elgin, Nairn, Orkney, Peebles, Perth, Renfrew, Roſs, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Sterling, Sutherland, and Wigton. It is probable, that Scotland, like the other nations of Europe, was firſt governed by a number of petty princes before the whole country became ſubject to the dominion of one ſovereign. At what time this event took place, it is impoſſible to aſcertain with any degree of certainty ; but there ſeems to be no doubt that the Scottiſh monarchy exiſted from a very remote period. According to hiſtorians. Fergus, commonly called the firſt king of Scotland, reigned 330 years before Chriſt, though later critics have conſidered the firſt 44 kings as imaginary, and begin the hiſtory with Fergus the Second, the ſon of Erth, who is ſaid to have been king of the Scots about the year 400. That Scotland was governed by a king at the time of the Romans viſiting England, is certain ; and it continued an independent kingdom till the death of the Engliſh queen Elizabeth, when James VI. the moſt immediate heir, was called to the throne of England, and conſtantly reſided in the latter : he and his ſucceſſors calling themſelves kings of England and Scotland ; each country having a ſeparate parliament, till, in the reign of queen Ann, both kingdoms were united, under the general name of Great Britain. Sixteen peers being elected to repreſent the nobility, and ſixteen members being choſen to repreſent the counties and boroughs in the ſame general parliament with England. After the revolution, which changed the ſucceſſion from the houſe of Stuart, this unfortunate family had many adherents in this part of the kingdom, and two attempts were made in their favour in the years 1715 and 1745, which ended in the ruin of the projectors : that family is now virtually extinct. There are five univerſities in Scotland, viz. St. Andrew's, Glaſgow, Edinburgh, New Aberdeen, and Old Aberdeen. The religion is the Preſbyterian, which was eſtabliſhed ſoon after the reformation. There are few Roman Catholics, nor are the Epiſcopalians numerous. Before the reformation, Scotland contained two archbiſhoprics, St. Andrew and Glaſgow, and twelve biſhoprics, Aberdeen, Argyle, Brechin, Caithneſs, Dumblain, Dunkeld, Edinburgh, Galloway, the iſles of Murray, Orkney, and Roſs.

SCOTLAND, a river on the weſt ſide of the iſland of Barbadoes, which runs into the ſea, 3½ miles SSE. Cuckold's Point.
